Patafunk is a Venezuelan singer-songwriter, producer, DJ and multi-instrumentalist. In 2008, Patafunk released his well-received debut album “Dubdelic”, an eclectic arrangement of music that merges Latin, pop, and disco-funk. Four songs off the album topped the charts in Venezuelan radio; the song “Surferston ft. G2” peaked at #2 on the Venezuelan billboard chart, “Record Report”, with Rolling Stone Latin America calling it one of the best albums of the year for its distinctively pleasant, “ocean-like sound”. Between 2008-2010, while working on his sophomore album “Playa”, Patafunk became a household name in the Venezuelan music scene, delivering multiple nation-wide tours and championing his own radio show on contemporary music.

Patafunk released “Playa” in 2011 after moving to Brooklyn, NY to continue chasing his dream of international stardom. The album was featured in the iTunes “New and Noteworthy” section, while the song “NegraChinaLatina” reached #1 in Venezuelan radio and was featured in MTV Latin America. Patafunk has held residencies at NYC staples such as Soho House, Le Bain, Schimanski (previously Verboten), and Hotel Hugo; while his global sound has enlivened audiences at shows and festivals around the world, including: SXSW, Tribeca Film Festival, CMJ, and Miami Art Basel. Patafunk’s latest creation, the album “High Life!”, is a testament to his incredible range and genius as an artist. The album fuses his Latin-reggae roots with the best of New York’s multicultural ethos, creating a sound unlike any other. The highly anticipated album “High Life!” is set to release in 2019.
