Jerry johns basic reading inventory pdf

BETH JOHNSBeth Johns is a writer and editor who lives in Seattle, Washington. She has grown up with the Basic Reading Inventory, assisting her father (author Dr. Jerry L. Johns) with presentations at Northern Illinois University and the University of Victoria in British Columbia as an example test student. For the last two editions of the Basic Reading Inventory, she has been instrumental in field-testing many new and revised passages. Her contributions for this edition focus primarily on refining and strengthening the materials for grades 3-12, while adding fresh insight to the project as a whole. She is a current member of the International Literacy Association, the Washington Organization for Reading Development, the Seattle Reading Council, and the Seattle Women's Hockey Club. Jerry Johns' Basic Reading Inventory has been a staple, used in all sections, in both our undergraduate Elementary and Master's of Science in Reading Education programs for many, many years. It offers both the pre-service and in-service teacher very explicit directions for assessing a student's strengths and areas for growth. Each edition includes the suggestions for using the insights that are gained with this instrument. Learning to administer the BRI has been a significant element contributing to the outstanding quality of our programs! Joyce C. Fine, Ed. D., Florida International University I use Basic Reading Inventory for both undergraduate and graduate diagnostic reading courses because it offers a range of forms. Dr. Mary Ann O'Neil, Kutztown University I believe Johns' Basic Reading Inventory is the most user-friendly IRI on the market. It's layout is exceptional, with comprehensive directions for teacher use. Having multiple passages to choose from also makes it easier to evaluate various reading strategies in oral, silent, and listening reading modes. Directions for miscue analysis and an excellent mix of comprehension questions, including directions for retellings, gives the teacher confidence in both implementation and scoring. Kenneth Schatmeyer, Ph.D., Grand Strand Educational Consultants Johns' Basic Reading Inventory works well with a variety of graduate students including certified teachers and those in our MAT program.
