Health Choice

Since 1970, Oklahoma has required some vaccines for children to attend public school or daycare. Oklahoma has also allowed vaccine exemptions since requirements began in 1970. Exemptions are required if a parent chooses to opt-out of even just one dose of one vaccine. Parents may use a vaccine exemption for medical, personal, or religious reasons.

As of the 2018-19 school year, Oklahoma has a 2.6% exemption rate. Only 0.1% of these exemptions are medical. Medical vaccine exemptions are extremely rare and difficult to get. Many doctors are afraid to write a medical exemption because they fear criticism from the medical community. Many doctors recommend that parents use a personal, or religious belief exemption, even if their child has suffered a significant and life-threatening vaccine injury.

Oklahoma's 2.6% exemption rate is relatively low. 37 states have higher exemption rates than Oklahoma. Oregon and Idaho have the highest exemption rates of the entire United States, at 7.7%.

Currently, the Oklahoma Department of Health can make changes to the list of required vaccines for school children and daycares. These changes are in effect until and unless the Oklahoma legislature passes a joint resolution of disapproval within the required time frame. If elected, would you support changing this so that the legislature must approve or disapprove changes before they are put into effect? For a sample of this legislation, please see HB 1112:

Currently, many Oklahoma schools send out notices that children need vaccines prior to enrollment. Many of these notices do not include information on vaccine exemptions, making it appear that parents are not allowed to opt-out. Would you support a measure that requires schools to include the truth about vaccine exemptions, in a brief sentence? For example: "Immunizations must be up to date in order to complete enrollment. The State Board of Health prescribes the immunization requirements and the frequency of their administration.
