Celebrate history

Want to time travel? Take a walk through award-winning downtown Bath, Maine. Start at the park on the mighty Kennebec River, the second largest in the state. It may look placid, almost lake-like. Or it might be ferocious, tides rushing in and out, following the path scraped clean by the glaciers eons ago. The Wabanaki people first traversed it in dugout and birch bark canoes, then captains in merchant vessels, yachts, and warships.

Front Street

Just traces of the wharfs and shipyards remain, but during its 1850s heyday, Bath was the 4th largest seaport in the United States based on ship tonnage registered locally. One historian says more ships were built here in those years than any other comparably sized place on earth. 21 shipyards side by side building commercial ships—all in support of the exploding American economy that opened up the world. Rare was the harbor—Japan, India, Chile, worldwide—that didn't have a ship at anchor with the hailing port of "Bath, Maine" proudly marked on its transom.

Today, Maine's First Ship invites you to come aboard its 17th century styled pinnacle, a reconstruction of the very first British ship built in North America (map cover photo). Go deeper at the Maine Maritime Museum, which sits on the grounds of a historic shipyard, or book a boat tour and see it all from the water, as the captains and seamen once did.

Head to the vibrant business district on Front Street. Bath boasts one of New England's most impressive 19th-century era downtowns with an unbroken string of Federal, Italianate, and Greek Revival brick storefronts. Take a break and enjoy the 21st-century shops, cafes, and restaurants bustling in these historic spaces.

Turn south—up Front Street, toward the spot where Maine's first governor, William King, warned locals "The British are coming!" during the war of 1812 (narrator: they were not), then led the successful fight for statehood.

The Arch

Through "the arch", you can look for the remnants of the 1830s Bath Iron Foundry, which in 1865 caught the eye of a 24-year-old Brigadier General returning from the Civil War. Thomas W. Hyde foresaw the transition from wooden-hulled vessels to those of iron and steel, founding Bath Iron Works, still going strong today, proudly building ships for the U.S. Navy.

For a quick photo op, pop over to the corner of Front & Centre Streets. (Did we coin the phrase? Maybe...) In one direction, the Italianate Sagadahoc County Courthouse looms large on the hill; in the other, the majestic Davenport Memorial City Hall (with the Paul Revell bell). A block away, climb the granite Custom House steps, where in 1889, President Benjamin Harrison got an ovation when he hinted at navy contracts to come for the shipyard next door. Hungry for more history? Explore the dozens of historical markers downtown and beyond or take a walking tour.

SPIRIT OF BATH, CITY OF SHIPS ~ Mural by Christopher Cart, on the corner of Vine & Front Streets.

Bath Farmers' Market

History continued... Listen closely for the voices of the free black businessmen, standing by to help enslaved people escape in the antebellum era, or the guilt-ridden blacksmith confessing that it was his spark that set off the devastating fire of 1894. Or listen for Emma Eames, the world-renowned soprano, knocking on doors with a diva's confidence to secure funds for homefront efforts during World War I.

Summer Concert Series

Ready to return to the present? Recharge with a coffee or a beer, perhaps losing yourself in a beach-worthy novel by a Maine author. Write your postcards at a riverside restaurant, or grab a stool at the pub next to a local. Kick back at an outdoor concert, hop the trolley, or stroll the farmer's market. Plot your course (and pack a picnic!) to wonderful sandy beaches and lighthouses, or the miles of conservation trails just a few minutes away alongside the Kennebec. And, since this is Bath, always keep an eye peeled for ships, or their ghosts—and come back tomorrow!
