The Feast of the Nativity of the Theotokos, the first major feast of the Eastern Orthodox liturgical year and signals the dawn of salvation history. Although the New Testament is silent regarding the birth of the Virgin Mary, the rich narrative is faithfully preserved in Holy Tradition which recounts how God answered the fervent, long-suffering prayers of the righteous, childless Saints Joachim and Anna, transforming their sorrowful barrenness into miraculous joy. As the traditional hymnography declares, Mary's holy birth brought joy to the whole world, serving as the ultimate preparation for the Incarnation of Christ. In Orthodox worship, the day is traditionally honored by wearing blue vestments—the color signifying her purity and a womb "more spacious than the heavens".
