A Reflection on Sunday's Word

Trusting God Through the Process of Change

Just as a potter shapes clay into something useful and beautiful, God continues to work in our lives, shaping our character, strengthening our faith, and teaching us to depend on Him. Sometimes the process is uncomfortable, and we may not understand why we are facing certain challenges, delays, or seasons of waiting. However, discomfort does not always mean something is wrong. God may be using these moments to prepare us for something greater.

The good news is that God can remake what is broken. We are never too damaged, too sinful, too old, or too far gone for Him to continue working in us. Our failures do not have to define our future, and our struggles do not have to be the end of our story.

A changed life requires a willingness to be changed. We cannot expect God to transform our circumstances while refusing to let Him transform our hearts. Sometimes we must release old habits, attitudes, bitterness, and ways of thinking so He can shape us into who He created us to be.

We may not understand every turn of the wheel, and we may not enjoy every season of pressure or waiting. But we can trust the Potter. When we surrender our lives to His hands, He can restore us, reshape us, and make us useful for His purpose.
This Week's Reminder: You are not finished, and God is not finished with you. Trust His hands, even when you do not understand the process

Together In Faith

Journaling Activity

Take a few moments this week to reflect on these questions:

- What uncomfortable situation might God be using to help shape my faith or character?
- Is there an old habit, attitude, or bitterness I need to surrender to God?
- Am I trusting God's process, even when I cannot see the outcome?
- What is one area of my life where I need to become more willing to change?

Prayer: Lord, help me trust You when life feels uncomfortable and the path ahead is unclear. Give me a willing heart that surrenders to Your hands. Remove what no longer belongs in my life, reshape my character, and help me become who You desire me to be. Remind me that my failures do not define me and that You are not finished working in me. In Jesus' name, Amen.
