Lace up those skates and tape those sticks, because Delta girls now have a hockey home to call their own.

The newly formed Delta Female Ice Hockey Association (DFIHA) - officially hitting the ice as the Delta Stars - has opened registration for its inaugural season which kicks off in September 2026.

Until now, Delta was one of only a few communities in the Lower Mainland without an independent female hockey association. But thanks to momentum fueled by the incredible Vancouver Goldeneyes season and girls signing up for hockey in record numbers nationwide, the wait is officially over.

DFIHA is 100 per cent volunteer-run and entirely dedicated to building a sustainable, rock-solid program designed to get and keep girls in the game.

"DFIHA is proud to offer girls in Delta a welcoming space to learn, play, and love the game of hockey, regardless of skill level," said DFIHA president Gillian Lowrey. "Our goal is to ensure that every girl who wants to play ice hockey has a spot on the bench, a program designed to support their growth, and coaches dedicated to girls in the game - right here in their own community. The response from parents and players has been amazing."

Registration is open for Delta girls ages five to 17. All skill levels - from beginner to experienced - are welcome.
