Santa Clarita City Councilwoman Marsha McLean has been tapped for leadership roles with two regional boards in southern California.

McLean has long been an advocate for the Santa Clarita community, focusing on transportation, environmental protection, homelessness and many other issues, adding a powerful local voice to policies and decisions that directly affect residents, according to a statement issued by the City of Santa Clarita Thursday.

"It is an honor to serve the Santa Clarita community not just as a member of the City Council, but also as a champion for local issues at the regional, county and state levels," McLean said in a statement Thursday. "I will continue to be a strong advocate and ensure the voices of Santa Clarita Valley residents are heard."

In Oct. 2020, the San Fernando Valley Council of Governments (SFVCOG) elected McLean to serve as its representative on the League of California Cities, Los Angeles County Division, advocating for SFVCOG members at the county level. On Jan. 21, McLean was unanimously chosen to serve as the organization's Vice-Chair.

As the City of Santa Clarita's representative on the SFVCOG, McLean works with leaders from the City and County of L.A., as well as Burbank, Glendale and San Fernando, to give Santa Clarita a voice to increase coordination and improve the regional economy, mobility and safety.

Then on Tuesday, McLean was unanimously elected to serve as Chair of the North L.A. County Transportation Coalition (NCTC). McLean is a proponent for safe, reliable and efficient public transportation for Santa Clarita Valley residents and serves as one of the City's representatives on the NCTC.

In her role as Chair, McLean is set to further NCTC's mission to improve the movement of people and goods in the North L.A. County region by implementing projects and programs that address critical transportation issues that residents face.
