

Louisiana Iris

These colorful hybrids are derived from five species of iris that are indigenous to the wetlands of Louisiana and Southeastern Texas. Their common name as a group was coined by James Audubon when he began sketching the fauna and flora of Louisiana in the 1820's. Often known as a water plant, these iris perform equally well in normal garden bed conditions. Available in a virtual rainbow of colors. Their attractive blue-green foliage is evergreen. Plant in sun to part sun. Sometimes go dormant in the very hottest part of our summers. Blooms late March, April or May in Houston. Their height varies from 12" up to 36". Great cut flower.
