How To Harvest A Wife: The Art of Wooing Women

A Step-By-Step Guidebook for Farmers Seeking Marriage BEAU VINE

How to Harvest a Wife

A Step-by-Step Guidebook for Farmers Seeking Marriage

Beau Vine

Planting the Seeds of Romance Getting Her Attention

Just as a bountiful harvest starts with the right soil and seeds, so too does a successful courtship begin with laying the groundwork. You wouldn't toss seeds on rocky ground and expect a bumper crop, so don't expect love to bloom if you don't prepare yourself first.

Step One: Survey the Land

Before setting your sights on a fine maiden, ensure she is not already spoken for. Nothing sours a romance quicker than realizing the fair lass you've been wooing is promised to the blacksmith's burly son. A bit of friendly inquiry (and watching where she sits at the village festival) should set you straight.

Step Two: Make Yourself Presentable

We'll discuss this in greater detail in Chapter 3, but suffice it to say, looking like you just rolled out of the pigpen won't do. Women appreciate a hard worker, but they also appreciate one who at least attempts to wash the evidence of his labors off before socializing.

Step Three: Find Common Ground

If she enjoys tending to the family garden, comment on the fine quality of her vegetables. If she's often seen at the market haggling for the best deals, admire her keen business sense. Women appreciate a man who takes an interest in their skills beyond mere beauty. Remember, compliments should be sincere—saying "You milk cows beautifully" might not be the best approach.

The Fertile Field of Flirting (Pickup Lines That Avoid Pitchforks to the Face)

Flirting is much like spreading manure—it's necessary for growth, but too much at once can drive people away. The key is knowing the right amount and the right way to deliver it.

The Art of the Compliment

Women enjoy a well-placed compliment, but there's a fine line between charming and ridiculous. Consider the following comparisons:

- Good: "You've got the prettiest smile in the village."
- Better: "Your laugh is sweeter than fresh honey."

• Bad: "You've got a set of teeth finer than my prizewinning heifer." (Avoid comparisons to livestock.)

Reading the Signs

If she laughs, smiles, or teases back, congratulations you're sowing success! If she rolls her eyes, crosses her arms, or reaches for a blunt object, retreat and try a different approach.

Some Suggested Lines to Try

- Are you a bushel? Because I'd love to give you a peck
- You must be a ripe head of wheat, because you look like the cream of the crop.
- I've got great soil—perfect for putting down roots.
- Are you a cow? Cause I'd let you graze my pasture any day.
- Do you believe in love at first sight?...or should I walk by your field again?
- Is it Harvest time yet? Because I'd pick you in any season!
- If you were a vegetable, you'd be a cute-cumber
- I feel like a cow in tall grass, because I'm udderly tickled to be here with you!
- Are you corn? Because you're ear-resistible
- Of all the pretty faces out there, I just can't seem to look pastures.
- I would love to take you out on a date. I am outstanding in my field.
- If you carrot all for me you'll lettuce be together
- Do you believe in love at first sight?...or should I walk by your field again?
- Roses are red, tomato's are redder. I think we both know; I like you better
- Would you carrot all to get hitched?
- Well shut the gate because my heart just bolted.
- Do you have a green thumb? Because you're making my heart bloom.

Don't Smell Like a Barn! (And Other Practical Tips)

Hard work is admirable, but wooing requires a bit of refinement. Here are the basics:

Cleanliness is Courtship

You wouldn't serve a pig at a feast (unless it's roasted), so don't present yourself in an unkempt state. A quick rinse in the river, a brush through the hair, and a fresh shirt can work wonders.

Dress for Success

No need for fancy nobleman's garb, but a tunic without patches, boots without holes, and a hat that doesn't double as a bird's nest make a fine impression.

Mind Your Manners

Chew with your mouth closed, keep your elbows off the table, and don't wipe your hands on your trousers before shaking hers. Small courtesies go a long way.

The Fragrance Factor

If a hard day's work has left you smelling riper than a sunbaked compost heap, take appropriate measures. A splash of lavender water or a sprig of mint tucked in your pocket can make all the difference.

Reading the Weather (Understanding Women and Winning Their Hearts)

Just as a good farmer knows to read the sky before planting, a good suitor must learn to read a woman before wooing. Romance, like farming, is about timing, patience, and understanding what the land—er, lady—needs. If you go in blindly with no regard for the season, you'll end up kneedeep in mud, wondering where you went wrong.

1. The Seasons of a Woman's Mood

A woman, much like the weather, can be unpredictable. One moment, she's the warm sun smiling at you across the field, and the next, she's a thunderstorm brewing because you tracked mud onto her clean floor. The trick is to pay attention to her "weather patterns."

• Spring: She's happy, hopeful, and open to conversation. This is the perfect time for compliments and charming stories about your farm dog's latest antics.

• Summer: She's warm but busy. If she's focused on her work, don't hover like a horsefly—offer to help instead.

A well-timed act of service is worth more than a thousand clumsy compliments.

• Autumn: She's thoughtful and reflective. This is your chance for deep talks by the hay bales. Ask her about her dreams and actually listen.

• Winter: If she's quiet or irritable, give her space. Like a frozen field, she'll thaw in time—but not if you pester her.

2. Cultivating the Soil: The Key to a Woman's Heart

Every woman is different, but most will appreciate these qualities in a man:

• Hard Work: A lazy man is as appealing as a field overrun with weeds. Show her you're dependable.

• Good Humor: Life on the farm (and in love) is messy. If you can laugh when you step in a cow pie, you're a keeper.

• Kindness: A gentle hand with a skittish colt and a kind word to a tired lady go a long way.

• Respect: If she says no, don't push. Consent isn't just for borrowing a neighbor's plow—it applies to courtship, too.

3. The Harvest: Making Her Fall for You

Love isn't a crop you can force to grow overnight. But if you plant seeds of kindness, water them with patience, and tend to them with care, you'll wake up one morning to find that love has taken root.

And if all else fails? A bouquet of flowers or a freshbaked pie never hurt your chances.

Composing Love Letters (That aren't chicken scratch!)

Not every man is blessed with a poet's tongue, but a wellpenned letter can make even the roughest farmhand seem charming. Here's how to ensure your words are received with delight instead of confusion.

Step One: Legibility Matters

If your writing looks like a rooster ran across the parchment, take the time to write slowly and clearly. If necessary, enlist the help of a literate friend (preferably one who won't mock you).

Step Two: Keep It Simple

A love letter need not be filled with grand prose to be effective. A straightforward approach works best:

Dearest [Her Name],

I hope this letter finds you well. I find myself thinking of you more often than the coming harvest. Your kindness and laughter make even the hardest days brighter. If you would do me the honor of a walk through the orchard on Sunday, I would be most grateful.

Sincerely, [Your Name]

Step Three: Avoid Unintended Insults

• Do not write: "Your hair reminds me of golden hay."

• Instead, try: "Your hair shines like spun gold in the sunlight."

• Do not write: "You have a strong build—perfect for churning butter."

• Instead, try: "You carry yourself with grace and strength, like a queen among the fields."

Step Four: Deliver with Care

Slipping the letter into her basket at market, passing it through a trusted sibling, or attaching it to a bouquet are all fine methods. If you send it via carrier pigeon, ensure the bird doesn't mistake it for nesting material.

Milking the Moment

(Knowing When to Hold Her Hand and When to Hold Your Horses)

Patience is key when courting. Much like waiting for crops to grow, rushing the process can lead to disaster.

When to Make a Move

If she lingers in conversation, smiles often, or accepts small gifts, these are good signs. However, moving too fast such as declaring love after a single dance—may scare her off faster than a fox in the henhouse.

The Hand-Holding Dilemma

If you're walking together and your hands brush, wait to see if she pulls away. If she does not, offering your hand in a light, confident manner is acceptable. If she declines, respect her space and try again another time.

Signs You're Moving Too Fast

• She suddenly remembers she left the kettle boiling whenever you approach.

• She "accidentally" drops a basket of apples and scurries away before you can help.

• She starts wearing a bonnet so low you can barely see her face.

The Moment of Truth

If things have progressed well, and the time feels right, you may ask for permission to court her officially. If granted, congratulations! If denied, take heart—there are many fields to plow, and love, like farming, rewards persistence.

Final Thoughts

Courting is an art, much like farming. It requires patience, effort, and a bit of humor. With careful tending, a good match can yield a lifetime of happiness—one that, with luck, includes love, laughter, and a well-tended homestead.

Now go forth, till the fields of romance, and may your harvest be bountiful!