For A Lesbian And Gay Hall Of Fame

Recently a flood of books have appeared that chronicle gay American history. Such books, and the interest in our history they represent, constitute a very encouraging trend in gay culture.

But despite our growing historical consciousness, many myths about gay history endure. One is that the modern gay and lesbian liberation movement began at Stonewall in 1969.

It did not. 1990 may well be the twenty-first anniversary of Stonewall, but it's the fortieth anniversary of the start of modern gay and lesbian liberation. That social landmark was the founding, in November of 1950, of the Mattachine Society.

The Mattachine founders, and their lesbian sisters in the Daughters of Bilitis, were the first Americans to organize politically and proclaim that gay is good. Their creed was a self-invented revolutionary concept: that gays and lesbians are not a group of immoral psychopaths needing treatment, but an oppressed minority deserving civil rights. That simple idea seems obvious to us today, but in 1950 it was so unorthodox and unthinkable that most gays and lesbians rejected it. The founders of Mattachine and Bilitis had to fight against the weight of their own internal homophobia, as well as the combined oppressions of psychiatry, religion, cultural precepts and the bitter threat of the law. Yet their long, lonely, brave struggle to found our movement was successful. Such courage places them alongside history's greatest explorers and emancipators.

Yet unlike Marco Polo or Martin Luther King, Jr., the founding mothers and fathers of gay liberation are largely forgotten by the people they helped to free. Their movement in the 50s and 60s gave rise to the social conditions and attitudes that made Stonewall and its aftermath possible. Yet for most gays and lesbians the modern period begins at Stonewall, and earlier contributions are glossed over or forgotten.

This situation could be partially remedied, and our sense of history strengthened, by the establishment of a formal vehicle for our community to honor its heroes. Such a vehicle could be a Lesbian and Gay Hall of Fame. Situated in a major city, a Hall of Fame would help us focus on those individuals most responsible for the advances which have made open gay and lesbian culture possible. Yearly induction ceremonies could shine a long-deserved spotlight on the parents of the Queer Nation.

Our community has the historical and organizational expertise to easily accomplish the founding of such a memorial. All that's needed is a consensus that such an institution would benefit the growing historical consciousness of gays and lesbians. At the start of the fifth decade of our liberation, it's hard to believe that it wouldn't. ▼

Name Shame

OutWeek screwed up and screwed up royally. While you deserve praise for igniting the "outing" debate which is raging in your letters column, private conversations and the national media, including The New York Times (oops, I mean Crimes), OutWeek neglected to define its terms. 'Homosexual' is being used incorrectly and interchangeably with 'lesbian' and 'gay.'

'Homosexual' has a narrow definition which is purely descriptive of a person's sexual orientation. 'Lesbian' and 'gay' have wide definitions and refer to a person's social identity and represent an entire cultural dimension.

I join the chorus of demands that the entire editorial staff of OutWeek resign immediately.

Hal Bramson

Straight from the Heart

I would like to thank the editorial staff of OutWeek for their comments regarding me in the editorial entitled "Straights, Gays and Leadership" ("Outspoken," no. 43, Apr. 25).

As I begin my seventh year as the executive director of the Community Health Project, I look back with a great sense of pride and accomplishment and look forward to the challenges that lie ahead.

I have been truly fortunate and privileged to have had the opportunity to serve and work with the lesbian and gay community. I will be forever grateful to the board of directors, the staff and the volunteers of Community Health Project for their trust, support and love, and to the thousands of patients who use the clinic for teaching me about courage and dignity.

Structural Damage

It seems to me that in the discussions and debates over the ill-conceived decision of the Fund for Human Dignity to hire a heterosexual white male to lead their organization, the cause of such an absurd choice has been overlooked.

Why is it that gay organizations feel compelled to structure these groups exactly like the larger society that oppresses us? I was involved with the Firehouse of GAA and watched that organization crumble after losing the revolutionary edge by structuring ourselves like a corporation and in fact becoming one. I don't know how we expected to be an evolutionary group with a charter and an executive committee. This folly continues to this day.

Groups are formed to handle problems ignored and/or caused by this type of elitist structuring. In an alarmingly short period of time, these groups form a power structure of executives and committees that spend most of their time struggling to maintain and perpetuate that structure and the position and power of those running it. Soon these people are so far removed from the mainstream gay life that they have no idea what the "real" people think, want or need. Now, the average gay must wade through two levels of bureaucratic bullshit. The leaders of these groups become bureaucrats in blue jeans only responsible to each other.

As is the case with Fund for Human Dignity, these groups and people must be held accountable. When they make decisions that are so stupid, insulting and out of touch, they should be treated like any other of our enemies; with contempt and outrage. Their insensitivity is insupportable and we should tell them so. The fault lies as much with us as it does with them. We gays seem perfectly willing to allow others to take these positions, make decisions affecting us all and represent us as they wish because we are too lazy to do it ourselves.

These groups seem to think that those in power will not take us seriously unless we present a respectable image. In case you haven't noticed folks, they don't take us seriously anyway. They either openly hate us or turn tail and run when this suits their purposes. Aside from a few crumbs tossed from the table, the only group getting anything done these days is ACT UP. Their confrontational/revolutionary tactics remain an "embarrassment" to some. Shame on you! It is time we said a hearty FUCK YOU to all that crap and STOP apeing our oppressors. With all the creativity and imagination in the gay community, can't we come up with a truly alternative structure to corporate America's selfish self-preservation? I believe we can. Gays can do anything.

STONEWALL RIOTS

BY ANDREA NATALIE

Although Fund for Human Dignity once did important work, we cannot allow them or anyone else a free rein to do whatever they please in our interests. We cannot possibly expect to make the huge government bureaucracy be responsive to our needs if we cannot even make our own community respond.

I Want to be Left Alone

Several thoughts concerning your magazine's recent policies concerning "outing" and naming names:

1) When someone comes out, publicly or not, it remains a deeply personal decision. It involves sorting out the most intimate family relationships and changing one's life based on one's own willingness and readiness to take the step. Just like a woman's right to choose, it is a private matter. Yanking someone out publicly before they themselves are ready (unless they are homophobic or hypocritical) is not only counterproductive, it is potentially dangerous. If they are unwilling to take a stand by themselves, what good are they going to do for the rest of us? Could anyone have forced Barney Frank or Harvey Fierstein to do all the good they have done? No, it came from their own hearts. Nobody is going to be a good role model for gays and society in general unless they take it upon themselves and act responsibly based on their own maturity. Certain social change cannot by nature happen overnight. Go and live in a small town if you don't believe this. It would be wonderful if everyone would come out and then proceed to change the world, but it can only happen person by person, town by town, family by family. Identifying Malcolm Forbes after his death is fun gossip and cocktail conversation, but that's about it. If you had brought him out when he was alive, he would have probably hired a hit man, and what good would that have done you?

2) Gay society has many enemies in the straight world, which continues to change for the better daily. But a new gay activist strain, while doing great good in changing AIDS policies and attitudes, is disturbing in other ways. Just as the Fundamentalist Christian derides others for not changing their ways and being just like they are, so do the militant gays threaten and attempt to intimidate other gays who might have a different perspective. The activists, and thank god for 'em, ignore the need for moderation in some delicate matters. Forcing someone out implies that it is a dirty secret, along the lines of Watergate or the Mayflower Madam, that must be exposed. It is bad enough that we have so many straight enemies. Now we have gay enemies as well, who are just as unyielding. Not all of us are screaming, raving activists. Most of us just want to be left alone.

3) Until your gossip maven, "Michelangelo Signorile," starts publishing under his own name and not using a pseudonym, I don't want to hear another word about honesty or "outing" out of his stupid mouth.

James David
Manhattan

Signorile responds: I even have a middle name and a confirmation name, both of which are more than three syllables. And end in vowels. Perhaps you are exercising your Italo-phobia and/or perhaps you've never heard of people named Leonardo or Rafael.

Casano-no

In the supermarket today, I found not one but two people's gossip sheets stating that the gayness of Richard Chamberlain is now known. The stories in The Star and The Enquirer were similar. There were photos of the star and his alleged lover, who was named, as well as "torrid love scenes" of the entertainer with his screen love-objects. Again and again, he was referred to as that great lover, Casanova, the person and the motion picture, Casonova, in which he had appeared.

Does much factual-or-otherwise gossip sell copies? You bet it does. At the human cost it must be added of invading the privacy of a person or persons akin to violating that individual's civil rights.

To put it another way, if a person—man or woman—does not choose to reveal his or her sexual attractions, the media should, respect that person's wishes, whatever the reason. (Is this an old-fashioned view? I think not.)

In the case of Chamberlain, his agents or publicist denied at once the allegations. Obviously because her client's ability to earn money as an entertainer—the star—to the masses would probably be seriously endangered. In fact, the poor man's career might be terminated.

Another case in point is Malcolm Forbes. Had he been alive when OutWeek's story broke, I dare say his role as outstanding entrepreneur, as well as editorial guide of that "capitalist tool," Forbes magazine, would have been threatened and worse. And again his private and, in this instance, familial life greatly hampered.

But if an individual—a gay or lesbian individual—is a threat in public, a homophobe, then it must be the duty of any homosexual publication, including and perhaps foremost, our very own OutWeek, to expose that phony, malicious individual, no matter how important he or she may be.

Stonewall and the whole lesbian and gay rights movement never would have happened if lesbians and gays had remained in the closet. Indeed, all political change comes about because people "come out" with their opinions and demands in public. The way to see political change in this society is to openly, loudly, exhaustively demand it.

Heterosexuality is not a political issue—homosexuality is. The only way we can make progress toward achieving equality in the future is to come out now. (If anyone has a valid reason why someone should remain closeted, please let me know.) How can one hope to "rise above" discrimination unless one "comes out" and reveals to the world how many of us fall into the "most-likely-to-be-discriminated-against" category(s)? If all closeted homosexuals came out, the political ramifications would be delightfully shocking.

Admitting and accepting one's sexuality is a "maturing process" and each individual matures at his or her own pace. FOLKS IN THE CLOSET—IT'S TIME TO GROW UP! It is time to help yourself and to help those of us who are already "out" in the struggle for political recognition, equality, change, freedom. Without the support, the presence of closeted lesbians and gay men, the war we are waging against the establishment will just take longer to win. Why wait? Isn't it time that we ALL get what we are ALL entitled to—acceptance, legal rights, social equality...freedom?

The issue of coming out basically comes down to two options:

1) You can choose to remain in the closet, lying to yourself and others, denying your true essence as a human being. You can CHOOSE to continue to act conversely to how you yearn to feel—living uncomfortably and unnaturally with yourself. You can choose to continue repressing your ideas, complaining about how things ought to be. You can choose to continue to DAMN yourself and the world, worrying about whispers behind your back, staring in shame at the spray paint on your locker, anguishing in the fear of the guilt inflicted on you by your family, dreading the threats from unsympathetic co-workers...UNTIL WHEN? There is NOTHING "GOOD" about being in the closet. IT IS NOT "SAFE."

NEWS • SEXUAL POLITICS • HEALTH • THE ARTS

2) You can, like us, come out and just be who you are. Fear will disappear. Weights will be lifted. SELF-pride will come to you. Happiness and purpose will replace misery, apathy and hopelessness. You will feel comfortable.

To all closeted (confused/afraid) homosexuals: PLEASE HELP YOURSELF. HELP US, YOUR LESBIAN AND GAY PEERS. WE NEED YOU TO COME OUT AND OPENLY

JOIN THE FIGHT FOR LESBIAN AND GAY RIGHTS. SMILE AND SHOW THE WORLD WHO YOU ARE. ONLY TOGETHER, UNITED, DETERMINED, VISIBLE AND EN MASSE CAN WE AFFECT CHANGE AND BETTER OUR LIVES. SEE YOU AT THE AIDSWALK.

A Story Is A Story Is A Story
Since having written my letter to you regarding the Malcolm Forbes cover story (no. 38, Mar. 18), I have received considerable trauma from friends who understood the tone of the letter to mean I was an avid supporter of "outing."

The denial of personal privacy to the famous, and the unscrupulous behavior of journalists is a matter I find annoying and very harmful, as is, for example, the prevalence of chauvinistic and homophobic media signals. But, in America, one has to take for granted that for every 100 persons willing to pay good money for something, there's another hundred willing to risk their lives to get it for them. It is with this in mind that I do not even address this issue.

Journalism, however, has long aggravated homophobia by still treating homosexual scandal as the only thing "too horrible and damaging to even print," in an era when topics such as sexual abuse and serial murder are completely "safe" territory; and so it is the double standard when that scandal relates to homosexuality that I resent.

Although I cannot see any reason why a person with a positive gay self-image would not want to come out, I also fail to see how an involuntarily "uncloseted" Forbes would be a positive gay role model dead or alive. I simply treated the story as new information in

LEATHER GEAR...

A battery of Blurt Out experts has been working around the clock to unpack the freight brought in by Vanity Fair scribe Kevin Sessums for his piece on Richard Gere. Handsome black-and-white portraits of the actor gamboling down a beachfront are set off with massive pull-quotes about Gere and his model runway-walker Cindy Crawford. Sessums plows for background on the actor's intricate evolution from "Bad-Boy Narcissist" to "Bad-Boy Buddha." Sylvia Martins throws in this piquante aside about her former beau gester, "He's a real drama queen." Costume designer William Ivey Long recalls, "To this day he is the first and only person to ever say, 'Watch the hands.'" Were this not enough, Sessums then treats the reader to a full column and a half on the homoerotic subtext in Mr. Gere's oeuvre. The Bad-Boy's take on all this? "[Internal Affairs is] a very homoerotic movie. There's no question about that. I'm surprised that reviewers didn't pick up on that. The first rough cut I saw of it, it was so clear. We weren't aware of it when we were shooting it. But it came off that way. All this guy stuff. Guys, guys, guys, guys..."

print. I do, however, resent the straight media's ignorance of the piece because it was not founded in compassion for Forbes but in compliance with a ridiculous and quite harmful folky.

This protective attitude of some homosexuals over "closet rights" are nearly always founded in one or two myths. The first being that homosexuality is no one's business because it relates to your sex life (pure bullshit, particularly in the age of AIDS). But the second myth, and by far the worse, is the deep-seeded and always below-the-level belief that homosexuality not only is considered something to be ashamed of by the masses, but something one ought to be ashamed of.

The worst thing about "outing" is that it doesn't seem to have changed, much less improved, the public's attitudes about gays; but worse than this is the fact that it has created more fear and created still more segregation within our own, off-times seemingly minuscule, minority.

Accepting that journalists are journalists and a story is a story, I am pleased to see that being gay is not still a "hands-off" issue because that has caused more damage over the years than "outing" ever will.

A Boy in the Hand

In the letters to the editor last week, several of those who wrote claimed "it is illegal for both gays and straights to have sex with minors...the law does not discriminate between gays and non-gays." Give me a break! Female prostitution takes place on East 11th Street where I live every night. Many of the girls are as young as 15 and sometimes, perhaps, younger. Never once have the police arrested a john for this consensual sex-for-money activity. Thousands of men each year use the services of these girls on my block alone. And I have never heard of any straight man being prosecuted for engaging in sex with any of the countless young prostitutes in our society. On the other hand, I have heard of johns being arrested who have paid boys for sex. The law may legislate against all who engage in sex with minors but it is obvious that it is not enforced evenhandedly. If intergenerational sex was good enough for Socrates and Plato, it should be good enough for anyone wishing to engage in it today.

Boys Behind Bars

Concerning Duncan Osborne on the arrest of NAMBLA Bulletin editor Chris Farrell ("Cops Nab Editor..." no. 40, Apr. 40), NAMBLA always supports its members who are accused of having sex with boys. Fortunately they supported me when I was accused of having sex with boys. As a gay man and a NAMBLA member, I support Chris Farrell. We are together in our views on this subject.

Megalip

Let OutWeek readers get the wrong impression that our community has found a "new friend" on the bias bill in Brooklyn's Sen. Christopher Mega, I'd like to fill in some details that paint a far less rosy picture than your April 25th article ("NY's Bias Bill Finds New Friend," no. 43, Apr. 25).

First, Mega's public pronouncement of support is far from news. In fact, Brooklyn activists pressured him into that position in mid-February when Brooklyn Residents Against Bias Related Violence and Lambda Independent Democrats picketed a Mega speech in Brooklyn Heights.

Speaking to newspaper reporters after the protest, Mega, for the first time, indicated public support for the bias bill. But this proved a hollow gesture since, in the same breath, he indicated an unwillingness to work to get the bill out of the Codes Committee (on which he sits) and past the Republican conference. "There are so many bills," he said. "I can't lobby for every single bill."

And that's the rub. Our community doesn't need another senator offering lip service on the bias bill. By all accounts, if the bill got to the Senate floor, it would pass

Dreamboat of the Week

This week's Dreamboat is brilliant singer/song-writer Michelle Shocked, who amazed and genuinely thrilled the Queer Nation last week when she publicly came out as a lesbian in an interview in Chicago's OutLines newspaper.

Said Michelle: "I resent like hell that I was maybe 18 before I ever heard the 'L' word. It would have made all the difference for me had I grown up knowing that the reason I didn't fit in was because they hadn't told me there were more categories to fit into."

There are, Michelle, and you do.

overwhelmingly. What we do need are members of the Republican Senate majority to make this bill a priority and to pressure their colleagues and the majority leader so the bill comes before the full Senate in 1990.

If You Go to San Francisco

ACT UP/SF is planning a series of non-violent, direct actions aimed at the Sixth International Conference on AIDS this June. ACT UP is organizing these activities as part of ACT NOW (AIDS Coalition to Network, Organize and Win, a network of more than 25 AIDS activist organizations in the U.S. and Canada.)

We are angry. We will use our anger to focus world attention on the decade of AIDS neglect. We will take to the streets to fight the U.S. government's inaction. We will respond to pharmaceutical profiteering, insurance company rip-offs and the cruel and discriminatory HIV policies of the INS (Immigration and Naturalization Service). We will protest the slow, deadly pace of treatment research and demand wider accessibility of experimental drugs. And we will confront the racism, sexism and homo hatred that have allowed this disease to spread unchecked for the past ten years.

We will invite everyone to attend these events, which include:

- June 17—Educational forum and workshop, "Speaking Across Borders," a mobilization program that addresses the issues facing the many diverse communities affected by AIDS and how activists can respond.

- June 18—Action preparation and civil disobedience training.

- June 19—Demonstration against the INS.

- June 20-22—These days are set aside to respond to issues arising at the conference.

- June 23—ACT UP/SF is part of a broad-based coalition calling for a mass march to demonstrate our shared commitment to ending the AIDS pandemic.

For more information about the activist agenda call ACT NOW at (415) 861-7505, 2300 Market, Suite 87, San Francisco, CA 94114 or ACT UP/SF at (415) 563-0724, 2300 Market St., Box 68, San Francisco, CA 94114.

Exclusion Revision

Regarding the quotation in the article "Blacks and Gays Gear up for the Myers Years" (no. 41, Apr. 11), which states: "I don't see our organization making a concerted effort to reach out to the gay community generally, although we have gay clients."

Removed from the context of my conversation with Ms. Reyes that quote is misleading. I see it also undermining the agency's efforts to serve the entire AIDS affected community in Brooklyn. These efforts include outreach to gay persons but not at the exclusion of other affected and often underserved populations.

Additionally, I would simply like to note, I hold the position of Coordinator, Support Services Recreation, not that of Case Manager as had been reported.

Thank you for an informative article.

Bush Signs Hate Crimes Bill Into Law

First Ever Gay-Inclusive Federal Legislation

by Cliff O'Neill

WASHINGTON—Marking the first time a gay inclusive bill has ever been passed into law, President George Bush signed the Hate Crimes Statistics Act April 23 before a standing room only crowd in the Old Executive Office Building.

"One of the greatest obligations of this administration and of the Department of Justice is the guarantee of civil rights for all Americans," stated Bush in his remarks before the signing. "Every one of us must confront racism, anti-Semitism, bigotry and hate, not next week, not tomorrow, but right now—every single one of us. For hate crimes cannot be tolerated in a free society."

The bill, granted final congressional approval in early April, orders the Department of Justice to collect and publish statistics on crimes motivated by bias based on race, religion, sexual orientation or ethnicity.

In his comments, Bush included the term "sexual orientation" in describing the scope of the bill.

"This is historic," remarked an excited Peri Jude Radevic, lobbyist for the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force. "I think that word is going to be overused today. But I don't know how else to express the feeling of being at the White House when the president has signed for the first time a gay-positive piece of legislation. And it was a Republican president that did it," she noted with irony.

Earlier, Frank Ricchiazzi, head of the Log Cabin Club, a California-based gay Republican group, was not so quizzical. "This shows that President George Bush has been a very open-minded leader who doesn't care about somebody's sexual orientation," he told OutWeek. "He does what's right. And the Log Cabin Clubs are very proud that we endorsed him and that we supported his candidacy for president."

"This signing sent a clear message that people in the Republican Party such as George Bush and [Sen.] Orrin Hatch [R-sponsors Reps. George E. Sangmeister (D-Ill.), John Conyers (D-Mich.), Jack Brooks (D-Texas) and Barbara Kennelly (D-Conn.) at the signing ceremony.

Representatives from the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force and the Human Rights Campaign Fund were also officially invited to the event, marking the first time that gay and lesbian groups have been invited to an official White House event.

Extending some of the Task Force's invitations to staffers at other gay and lesbian grassroots groups, Radevic brought along members of the Illinois Gay and Lesbian Task Force, Parents and Friends of Lesbians and anti-violence activist Claudia Brenner, whose lesbian lover was killed in an anti-gay attack.

Among the grassroots activists attending the function was Art Schenck, secretary of the Illinois Gay and Lesbian Task Force, who, along with Radevic, worked closely on the lobbying effort behind the bill.

"Grassroots activists worked very hard on this legislation," he stated, "and it's really important for us to see something like this come to be. It's a terrific moral booster for us out in the trenches."

Asked what the bill's signing means to grassroots gay and lesbian activists, Schenck responded concisely. "Simple," he said, "lobbying works."

One gay representative who was not in attendance, however, was Task Force Executive Director Urvashi Vaid, who on March 29 publicly interrupted a Bush speech on AIDS, a protest that received widespread media coverage.

Although Radevic had included Vaid on the Task Force's list of seven invitees

Utah] recognize that lesbian and gay Americans are part of the political mainstream," added Gregory King, communications director for the Human Rights Campaign Fund. "They recognize that it's counterproductive to bash lesbian and gay Americans."

Hatch, who co-sponsored the bill in the Senate with Sen. Paul Simon (D-Ill.), was joined by Sens. Simon, Howard Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) and House bill planning to attend the signing and had repeatedly lobbied the White House to allow Vaid to attend, she was informed by White House staffers late April 20 that because of her disruption two weeks before, Vaid was barred from attending the function.

Under the new law, the Federal Bureau of Investigation will now officially include bias-motivated crimes in their Uniform Crime Reports, which are distributed to local law enforcement offices nationwide. Although reporting of such incidents by local law enforcement is voluntary—as are similar reports on homicides, suicides and rapes—bill supporters expect that, after the requisite training, gay hate crimes statistics will be widely reported back to the Department of Justice.

Surprising lobbyists however, was Bush's announcement of a soon-to-be-established federal toll-free number through which victims of hate crimes can report incidents directly to the Justice Department.

"Those incidents that can and should be prosecuted will be reported directly to the appropriate federal, state or local agency for action," Bush stated. "The faster we can find out about these hideous crimes, the faster we can track down the bigots who commit them.

"We must work together to build an America of opportunity," Bush added, "where every American is free finally from discrimination. And I will use this noble office—this bully pulpit, if you will—to speak out against hate and discrimination everywhere it exists."

Washington gay activists had previously expressed skepticism that the president would actually hold a public signing of the bill.

Others had feared that if a public signing were held, White House staffers would invite other members of the coalition backing the bill, but avoid extending invitations to the gay and lesbian lobbying groups. ▼

National AIDS Activists Clog Chicago Loop; 129 Arrested

Five Take Over County Building Balcony

by Rex Wockner

CHICAGO—At least 129 AIDS activists from around the nation were arrested April 23 at various locations in the Chicago Loop, the city's main business district, as more than 500 ACT UP members protested alleged discrimination by health insurance companies and the "poor" level of care for HIV-positives at public hospitals.

Most of those arrested were charged with mob action, interfering with a police officer, or disorderly conduct, according to Police News Affairs spokesman Leroy Jirik. Police estimated the crowd at 1,000.

ACT UP chapters converged on Chicago because they say the problems with the health care system here are representative of the health care "crisis" gripping the nation.

The offices of several large insurance companies—including Prudential, Aetna, Mutual of New York and Blue Cross/Blue Shield—were picketed during the five-hour demonstration, which moved throughout the Loop and across the Chicago River to the north.

According to ACT UP, the insurance companies refuse coverage to individuals who live in "gay" zip codes, blacklist certain stereotypical "gay" businesses for group coverage (such as hair salons and theater companies) and refuse to pay for most AIDS drugs.

The insurance companies, some of which had public relations people working the media during the demonstration, deny the charges, even though ACT UP has obtained copies of Local Area AIDS Data, an alleged "gay"

Vigil Ante

CHICAGO—AIDS activists from across the U.S. staged a 24-hour vigil at Chicago's Cook County Hospital April 21-22, which they said represents the sorry state of public health care nationwide.

The activists, who belong to ACT UP chapters from around the country, spent a total of four days in Chicago conferencing, protesting and partying.

The beginning of the vigil attracted about 300 demonstrators, who set up several large tents to sleep in and listened to a series of speakers and performers.

Vigilers grooved to rap music performed by two musicians using only their mouths as instruments, and they whooped and hollered as each speaker noted that AIDS services are doled out unfairly to women and minorities.

Among the group's specific demands of the Cook County Board are: more money for AIDS services and the emergency room; the admission of women to the AIDS ward; and the firing of the hospital's administration and planning team.

According to materials prepared by ACT UP/Chicago, 150 HIV-infected persons are treated at Cook County Hospital each week but the AIDS ward only has 30 beds, 15 of which are empty due to understaffing.

The Cook County emergency room is also representative of public hospitals across the country, activists said. The current waiting period for treatment is often six to eight hours.

Activists also noted that the hospital is short 200 nurses and urged increased salaries for health care workers.

Formal complaints of police brutality

CHICAGO—At press time, leaders of ACT UP/Chicago announced plans to file formal complaints with the Office of Professional Standards of the Chicago Police Department and with a similar entity at the Cook County Sheriff's office, charging that police officers engaged in gratuitous violence and brutality while arresting the 129 demonstrators.

ACT UP's Tim Miller, one of the five men who took over the balcony to the Cook County Building, related this story of his arrest:

"One cop had a hold of my foot and another came down with his fist, with his ring-finger, on my forehead. He then kicked me and the other cops had to tell him, 'Cool out, you're being too severe.' And then he said, 'Get this bastard out of here.'"

"The cop who still had hold of my foot started charging with me, banging me against walls and doors, anything that got in his way. When we got to their office, one cop jumped on my head—putting the full weight of his body with his knee on my head—and another cop jumped on my back, putting his knee into the small of my back."

Miller said he sustained abrasions to both sides of his forehead and one cheek, cuts on his elbows and "four ugly black-and-blue strips up and down my back." He also claimed that police closed the windows to his paddy wagon and turned on the heater in 87-degree weather.

Other activists report that police charged their horses into a line of PWAs who were sitting in a street singing, that a PWA in a wheelchair was knocked from the chair and dragged to a paddy wagon and that one demonstrator, John Crocker of Long Island, required treatment at Northwestern Medical Center after police kicked and punched him.

Another activist reported being kicked by a police horse while standing on a sidewalk, and several protesters said police purposely dropped them before dragging them, handcuffed, to paddy wagons.

Several ACT UP lawyers were apparently arrested while watching police load protesters into the paddy wagons.

At a press conference the following day, attorney Jill Harris from ACT UP/New York said that her group had never seen such violence in any of its many confrontations with local police departments around the country.

Neither the Chicago Police nor the Cook County Sheriff had any comment on the charges, pending further investigation.

Outside the offices of Mutual, ACT UP/Chicago's Ferd Eggan read a letter from the company to an applicant who was told that although she had tested HIV-negative, her psychiatric records indicated that she is "promiscuous" and thus at high risk for AIDS. Mutual reportedly refused to insure the woman.

Eggan refused to show the letter to reporters for confirmation, citing confidentiality concerns.

The protesters also called for more stringent government regulation of the insurance industry, and nationalized health care.

The climax of the demonstration came around 11:30 when five activists with ACT UP/Chicago accessed the balcony over the main entrance to the

Mayor's Liaison Hire Imminent

by Duncan Osborne

NEW YORK — It appears that the administration of Mayor David Dinkins will appoint a woman long active in New York's Black gay community to be its lesbian and gay liaison.

Marjorie J. Hill is the only candidate for director of the Mayor's Office for the Lesbian and Gay Community to have received a second interview. All the other known candidates for the job report no communication with the mayor's office since their initial interviews nearly two months ago.

Reached for comment at her office in the Department of Psychiatry at Lincoln Hospital in the Bronx, Hill confirmed that she had a second interview on April 25.

Her initial interview took place in early March. Hill said that no job offer had been made during the interview, but also added that "no official decision has been made."

Hill has held several high-level positions in the lesbian and gay community, including co-chair, with Allen Roskoff, of Lesbians and Gays for Jackson during Rev. Jesse Jackson's 1988 presidential bid. She also served on the committee of Lesbians and Gays for Dinkins, and was instrumental in planning and executing a rally for the mayor held at the Lesbian and Gay Community Center just before the 1989 municipal election.

Currently, Hill is a member of African American Women United for Societal Change (formerly Salsa Soul Sisters), a group that provides a support network and a voice for the African American lesbian community.

Lee Hudson, the woman who held the liaison job under former Mayor Ed Koch, was optimistic about Hill's potential appointment, praising her as "an extremely effective leader in the African American women's community" who has an awareness of the concerns of the entire lesbian and gay population.

The mayor's office refused to discuss names in relation to the job, saying only that an appointment for the position is imminent.

Hill, 34, is a psychologist and resides in Brooklyn. ▼

Gay Commish Sworn In

by James Waller

NEW YORK—Dennis de Leon was sworn in as New York City's new human rights commissioner on Friday, April 20, becoming the highest ranking openly gay member of the administration of Mayor David Dinkins.

In his remarks, Mayor Dinkins praised de Leon's commitment to struggle and service in the cause of human rights. De Leon had served as deputy Manhattan borough president under Dinkins during the administration of Mayor Ed Koch.

After the swearing in, during which de Leon was joined at the podium by his mother, Josephina, the new commissioner gave a speech that was by turns personal, humorous and exhortatory.

Thanking Dinkins for having been appointed to the "position in your administration that I coveted most," de Leon gently parodied the mayor's oratorical style, saying, "It would have been less than helpful and a problematic posture were I to have assumed a position other than that which upon me was bestowed." The impersonation drew spirited laughter from the audience.

Crediting Dinkins' victory with introducing a new era in human relations in New York—one that would sweep aside the "selfishness and animosity" of the 1980s—de Leon said that he envisions the Human Rights Commission's work as including both enforcement of antidiscrimination laws and the active promotion of positive intergroup relations.

De Leon also promised to deal expeditiously with the backlog of cases now burdening the commission and to move on quickly to pressing law-enforcement tasks. At one point in the speech, he laid out a number of new, unexplored issues on which the commission might take action—issues that were brought to the fore, he said, during discussions with a variety of city human rights groups during the weeks preceding his taking office.

Among these areas of potential commission action were an examination of the extent of discrimination by health providers against people with AIDS and an investigation of the way in which the media handle bias-related incidents.

The brief ceremony, held in the Board of Estimate chamber at city hall, was marked by both grace and wit. An informal invocation by Rabbi Balfour Brickner was preceded by a musical performance by Jeannette Martinez and Jeanie Habib, whose song celebrated women's roles in the liberation movement in Latin America.

Also present were many staffers of the former Dinkins Manhattan Borough President's office and de Leon's lover, Bruce Kiernan. ▼

Liaison Chosen for Borough President's Office

by Duncan Osborne

NEW YORK—Martin Rouse, former executive assistant at the Lesbian and Gay Community Center, has been tapped to be Manhattan Borough President Ruth Messinger's liaison to the lesbian and gay community.

"I will use the job to make sure the community is included in all issues," said Rouse, adding that he would also avoid being pigeonholed as the office's gay problem solver. "If it's a gay or lesbian question, the response should not be 'give it to Marty,' but 'how do we handle this?," he continued.

His appointment as liaison comes in addition to his official duties. Rouse was hired to do advance work for Messinger, and it is his responsibility to make sure everything is properly organized for the beep's public appearances prior to her arrival.

Messinger, a long-time advocate for the gay community, has many gay men and lesbians working for her.

Two Gay Men Beaten in Subway Station

by John Voelcker

NEW YORK—A 20-year-old Bronx man, already on probation for a 1986 assault, was indicted by a grand jury Friday on new assault charges stemming from a brutal gay-bashing incident in the 137th Street IRT subway station in Manhattan. Police are still seeking three other suspects in the incident, during which two gay men were beaten. The New York City Lesbian & Gay Anti-Violence Project (AVP) has offered a $1,000 reward for information.

The assault occurred at about 6:30 pm on Sunday, April 22. In an exclusive interview with OutWeek magazine, one of the victims (who asked that their last names not be used while the three suspects are still at large) said they boarded the last car of a # 1 train at 96th Street and found themselves in the middle of a large raucous group of youths, some drinking beer.

As Michael, 34, and his lover Randy, 40, got off at 137th Street-City College, beer cans were thrown at them through the open doors of the car and one of the group yelled, "homos." When Michael picked up a can and threw it back into the car, the entire group allegedly swarmed out and attacked the two men. Both men were punched, and Randy was beaten unconscious.

Witnesses to the attack notified transit employees, who called the police. After the police arrived at the station, they questioned a group of women thought to be friends of the attackers. Michael then identified one of his alleged assailants among the bystanders, and police arrested the man, Steven Myers, of the Bronx. According to sources, Myers told police that he had acted in self-defense when the two gay men attacked and tried to rob him.

Randy was taken to the Columbia-Presbyterian Hospital emergency room. His cheekbone was broken in at least two places and the orbital bone around his eye had been fractured. He underwent reconstructive surgery last Wednesday.

This was not Myers' first brush with the law. In 1987, he pled guilty to first-degree assault, a felony, and was sentenced to five years probation. OutWeek has learned that the assault took place in a Bronx park, and stemmed from a neighborhood dispute that was not gay-related.

Matt Foreman, executive director of the Anti-Violence Project, said that during the first quarter of 1990, the number of anti-gay bias crimes reported to the AVP had risen 60 percent, from 113 to 181. Within that total, the number of assaults rose even more: 76 percent, from 30 to 53.

Advocates for the two men attacked requested that bail for Myers be set at $25,000, but the judge lowered it to $5,000. Myers was unable to make bail and is still being held. If applicable, he may also be charged with violating the civil rights of the two men attacked.

Anyone with information about the attack can call the Anti-Violence Project at (212) 807-0197. ▼

by Nina Reyes

NEW YORK—A photographer whose work was part of the show that drew the National Endowment for the Arts into the censorship fray last year recently had another run-in with visual vigilantes. On April 13, Allen Frame's Boys on the Couch was removed from the wall of a Lower East Side bar where it was on display as part of a larger exhibit, taken outside and trampled. The perpetrators then came back into the bar where, when questioned about their actions, one calmly explained that he didn't consider the piece art.

"One has to question where the impulse to commit that act of violence comes from," commented Marguerite Van Cook, curator of the exhibit at Max Fish, a bar on Ludlow Street. Arguing that the trend toward censorship of homoerotic art in the past year has created an atmosphere in which people feel they can destroy artwork casually, Van Cook said, "I think this is a sign of what this repression and that sort of thinking is leaving us."

FIGHT

Frame's piece was a composition of two photographs, one in color by an unknown artist, the other black-and-white taken by Frame. Both photos showed two men sitting on a couch gently touching each other. The work also had a reflective text, describing Frame's discovery of the color photograph. "It's an innocuous piece of art in the context of art censorship," Frame stated. "I was really surprised in that the piece seemed so unfrontational."

According to eyewitnesses, Boys on the Couch was taken down from the wall by a young white man who had come into the bar for a drink with several friends. With the help of his group, the man smuggled the piece, which measures 18" x 36", past the three security guards, took it outside and smashed it on the ground and returned to the bar. When the group was confronted by the bar's staff, they were "unabashed," according to Van Cook. "They felt free to commit acts of violence against anything that they didn't consider art," she said. The group left before the police could be summoned to the scene.

Although the piece now has fragments of glass embedded in the mat, Boys on the Couch was rescued from the street and returned to the exhibit, which comprises over 200 works on auction to benefit the Tent City anti-homelessness project. Frame thinks the work is stronger for its confrontation with a homophobic, censorship-minded viewer and he is considering adding another message to the work that would explain its slightly bedraggled state.

Last fall, the photos were part of the show at Artists Space from which the NEA rescinded and then restored funding. That exhibit, entitled Witnesses: Against Our Vanishing, featured works responding to the AIDS crisis. When that show's curator informed the NEA that the exhibit and its accompanying catalogue might stir some controversy, the federal art endowment pulled its $10,000 grant. Two weeks later, after artists, gay men and lesbians erupted in outrage over the action, the NEA reversed its decision. ▼

Holocaust memorials to include gay exhibits

NEW YORK — The Museum of Jewish Heritage, scheduled to open in lower Manhattan in 1992, will include a permanent exhibit on gay and lesbian victims of the Nazi Holocaust, as well as occasional special exhibitions on related subjects, according to Adam Brown, a gay museum staffer who is assembling materials for the collection. Brown spoke about his work on April 20 at Congregation Beth Simchat Torah, New York's gay and lesbian synagogue.

And the permanent collection at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, planned to open in Washington, D.C. in 1993, will also commemorate the Nazi's persecution of gay men and lesbians, according to Sam Eskenazi, director of public affairs for the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, which is overseeing the building and planning of the Museum.

An April 22 article about earlier controversies surrounding the scope of the national collection in The New York Times Sunday magazine neglected to raise the issue of gay and lesbian inclusion.

Eskenazi mentioned the influence of author and Holocaust survivor Elie Wiesel, on the commitment of his museum to include gay men and lesbians. Wiesel has spoken out publicly about worldwide resistance to acknowledging the Nazi's calculated destruction of Germany's incipient gay rights movement.

According to Brown, the New York museum's permanent exhibition will be divided into four main focuses: European and North African Jewry before World War II; the Holocaust; the aftermath of the Holocaust; and the Jewish immigrant experience in the United States. As part of the Holocaust installation, there will be a gallery devoted to "other victims," including lesbians and gay men.

During a recent research trip to Europe, Brown met with lesbian and gay Holocaust survivors who contributed materials for the exhibition. His research shows that many of the Jewish victims of the Nazis were lesbian and gay, and that gay Jews held leading positions in the powerful German gay rights movement before World War II.

The national museum will be the largest collection of Holocaust artifacts in the world, outside of the surviving concentration camps themselves, according to Eskenazi. The project's director, Michael Berenbaum, has also edited Mosaic of Victims: Non-Jews Persecuted and Murdered by the Nazis, a collection of essays which includes history about the gay community under the Nazis. It is due out next month.

According to Reuters news service, "this month East Germany broke a 40-year silence to disclose that thousands of homosexuals were slaughtered by the Nazis in World War II." West Germany officially began paying the same reparations accorded to Jews, about $2,800, to gay Nazi victims in 1987.

The New York museum is relying on donations of materials to help to make the exhibition as authentic as possible. Anybody with material to donate, including documents or personal recollections, can contact Brown at the Museum of Jewish Heritage, 342 Madison Avenue, Suite 717, New York, NY, 10173; or call (212) 687-9141. —Arthur S. Big victory at "Big Brothers"

WASHINGTON—A gay health educator's suit against Big Brothers has been settled, according to Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund. Under an agreement formalized on April 12, Big Brothers of the National Capital Area (Big Brothers NCA) will no longer refuse volunteers because they are gay.

"This is an acknowledgment that lesbians, gay men and bisexuals are capable of being responsible role models for children," said Jeffrey Gould, whose rejection by the Washington organization in 1988 led him to file a complaint with the D.C. Office of Human Rights (OHR), contending that Big Brothers NCA was in violation of the capital's Human Rights Act.

Big Brothers and Big Sisters groups match adult volunteers with children from single-parent homes who need male or female role models. Volunteers and kids ordinarily spend several hours together each week.

Discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation is barred in Washington, D.C., but Big Brothers NCA asserted that as a nonprofit volunteer organization it was exempt from that regulation.

Gould, interviewed by phone last week, was extremely pleased by the seriousness with which the OHR treated the case. According to him, the OHR has required that Big Brothers NCA allow it to oversee the agency's activities for the next two years to ensure that the nondiscrimination policy is effected.

He was especially enthusiastic about one of the terms of the settlement, which allows him to take an active part in training Big Brother volunteers and in preparing educational materials to sensitize volunteers to lesbian and gay issues.

After his rejection by Big Brothers

NCA, Gould managed to get in touch with the mother of his prospective "little brother." The meeting went well, and the mother decided to accept him as a companion for her son despite the agency's disapproval. Gould has been working with the seven-year-old since last September.

"I'm a 'big brother,' but I'm not a Big Brother through Big Brothers," Gould said.

Although the more than 460 Big Brothers and Big Sisters organizations around the country are affiliated with a parent agency, Big Brothers and Big Sisters of America, whose offices are in Philadelphia, they are substantially independent of and not required to follow exactly the standards set by the national headquarters. The guidelines for matching children with adult volunteers published by the national office do not exclude lesbians or gay men on principle.

And Laura Grove, an official with Big Brothers/Big Sisters of New York, told OutWeek that her chapter "absolutely does not discriminate against openly gay volunteers.

"You're not going to be treated any differently just because you're gay," said Grove.

Dannemeyer comes out on outing

WASHINGTON—Rep. William Dannemeyer (R-Calif.), the leading voice against lesbians and gay men in the U.S. House, has expressed his views on the subject of "outing," or threats to expose anti-gay closeted public figures, in a recent "Dear Colleague" letter to other members of Congress.

"Outing" is the new term being used by homosexuals to describe the act of accusing public officials of being homosexual when these officials fail to support the homosexual political agenda," wrote Dannemeyer in his April 23 missive. "Such a failure is now termed 'gay bashing' in the new vernacular."

upon directly criticizing other Members of Congress by name, Dannemeyer includes in his letter quotes from openly gay Reps. Barney Frank (D-Mass.) and Gerry Studds (D-Mass.) from a March 22 Los Angeles Times article on the subject of "outing" and accused them both of political "blackmail."

Studds released a terse, two-word statement in response to the Dannemeyer letter.

"It's preposterous," Studds declared.

Congressman Frank, who similarly attacked Dannemeyer directly in a much-publicized "Dear Colleague" letter in January, 1989, officially declined comment on the Dannemeyer letter.

Termining the practice "blackmail," Dannemeyer suggested that a Howe ethics panel consider the issue of outing in its deliberations.

"Two tragic ironies emerge from these statements," Dannemeyer continued. "...AIDS activists have finally endorsed restrictions on civil liberties... in the effort to fight public officials who happen to disagree with them."

"Second," Dannemeyer added "the 'outing' exercise is proof positive that the military was right all along—people can be blackmailed based on their homosexual behavior."

Dannemeyer, long a proponent of mandatory HIV-testing and name reporting of seropositives, has historically brushed aside arguments against those practices which cite civil liberties and privacy concerns.

The California Republican further quoted National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Public Information Officer Robert Bray—although not by name—from the same Los Angeles Times article saying how he once ran into a closeted gay congressman in a gay bar.

"I introduced myself on the dance floor [to the congressman] and called to his attention the hypocrisy that he had been legislating against gays," Bray told the Times. "He left the bar. He didn't say anything. But I think he got the message. He started voting pro-gay and has ever since."

Contacted afterwards, Bray

expressed the sentiment that in the letter Dannemeyer was falsely accusing him and the Task Force of endorsing the practice of outing and "blackmail."

Of the Dannemeyer letter itself, Bray added, "It's sort of classic Dannemeyer: bizarre, factually inaccurate and antagonistic." —Cliff O'Neill

Gobie busted for drugs after fender-bender

WASHINGTON—Notorious capital district call-boy Stephen L. Gobie was arrested April 11 on a busy downtown Washington street following a violent altercation with an off-duty D.C. police officer.

Gobie, who first came to light last summer when he told the press that he had run a prostitution service out of the home of openly gay Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.), was arrested on charges of felony destruction of property and marijuana possession, according to police reports.

A D.C. police detective who spoke to The Washington Post on condition of anonymity revealed that at approximately 2 pm, Gobie, who had just been involved in a minor traffic accident, "whizzed by" a car driven by an off-duty police officer who asked him at a spotlight if anything was wrong.

One street later, the detective reported that Gobie allegedly began shouting obscenities at the off-duty officer, got out of his car and stood in front of the officer's vehicle. When the officer began to back her car up, Gobie then allegedly climbed on her car's hood, pried his way into the car through the sunroof and began to struggle with her.

The detective reported that several of the pedestrians on the busy downtown street came to the aid of the officer.

Police allegedly later found the marijuana in Gobie's possession.

Gobie already has a record of felony arrests in D.C. and Virginia with prior convictions on cocaine possession and sex charges.

Little has been seen of Gobie in the last month after the much-ballyhooed tale of his exploits at Congressman Frank's side appeared in Penthouse to indifferent reviews from the Washington media.

Crossing the Gender Line

by Kathryn Otter

Sometimes I just confuse people. The sales clerk stares at me. "What can I do for you, ma'am...uh...sir...?" I just look at him. Most people don't have his confusion. I'm pretty easy to spot as being transsexual. It's a curious thing, to gauge other people's reactions, and to see how I am perceived. A lot of times it is the late night cabbies that I have to be careful of. It always seems that they are the first to grab at me ("Yo, baby-baby") precisely when I am in the mood to deck them for invading my space.

I was told by a friend (who had her surgery years ago) that the first time a guy grabbed her tush she considered it a compliment. Maybe for her—she likes straight men. I can't deal with them. The notion of being treated as an object placed on this planet solely for their pleasure galls me to no end. I like women. It's definitely makes life interesting, to be a pre-operative transsexual and to be a lesbian. But not as uncommon as people may think.

In the last year, since I have come out as being transsexual, I have met quite a few lesbians who have had gender corrective surgery. They are going on with life, and generally, if they don't mention that they are transsexual, nobody thinks a thing of it. They "pass."

I choose not to pass. I am personally proud for living through 23 years of being a little girl and then a young woman and being told throughout that time that I was male. It's a hell of a life to survive, and I see no reason to deny what I am or to be ashamed of a defect in my genetics that I had no control over. The only way out of the trap in which society places a transsexual person is to be loud and proud of who we are, and so I am. I refuse to be told that I am not what I am, which is a woman.

Non-transsexual women are often called "real" and "biological" women. This implies that I am somehow fake. But just as some women are born sterile from a defect on one area of the gene code, there are some women born with the wrong primary genitals due to a defect in another area. Same problem, different placement.

Like most kids, I was trained from day one to obey my parents, and to not obey them made me "bad." After years of having masculinity thrust on me by my parents, the guilt and shame from denying it was devastating. I am going against them by acknowledging and dealing with my transsexuality. I am being "bad." This is not uncommon, and dealing with one's parents is a difficult issue for most transsexuals (and most lesbians and gay men in general). I just told mine, in no uncertain terms, what I am and what I am doing to correct the mistakes of my body. They did not handle it well. We find it easier to communicate by phone, not in person.

I often feel that the only other people that have a problem with my transition are in the lesbian and gay community. Some men say they "can't imagine why I would possibly want to do this to myself," and offer their opinion that I am involved in self-mutilation. There are women who act as if I am an intruder into a club of some sort. But I must either accept what I am and get on with my life, or I'd probably be successful at another of the suicide attempts that I made when I was younger and did not understand a lot about transsexuality. Even so, people still get upset with me and act in a bigoted way.

I am presently going through therapy and huge dosages of hormones; I am facing immense legal obstacles, and an operation that is going to be extremely painful and traumatic, all because my mind and my body need to agree. To put it paradoxically: I am what I am becoming. No person, sane or insane, would put up with the day-to-day bullshit that I deal with just because he has a preference for skirts over three-piece suits from Barney's. My need is not to look sweet and soft and to be Donna Reed, but to get my body to be my body and to feel something besides numb. And numbness is a pretty easy way to go when you don't understand why your body just is not right, but you know that it isn't. I just turned my feelings off to the issue for a long time and tried to survive by acting male.

I tried all kinds of personas. I was a biker, a Dead head, a gay male, a straight male, a jock, a prep, a junkie: you name it. None worked. I had to stop denying the truth that I knew but did not want to speak of. It took me sticking a shotgun in my mouth before I would recognize that the time was now to deal with myself. It was only then that I began to get some peace in my life. I knew the struggle was over, and I had won: I would be me.

I realized that my sex has nothing to do with my sexuality. I had always sexually lived through the bodies of my girlfriends because I was too numb to experience it myself. I'm also not equipped to enjoy genital sex. What use does a lesbian have for a penis? Not much, so the woman I date and I sexually concentrate on other parts of my body and we don't let two inches of non-functioning flesh get in the way of a really good relationship.

I am learning to live my life as I choose. This is my reality, and there are days that I am happy to be living. A year ago I did not expect to be speaking publicly about being a transsexual woman. But I am gradually realizing that there are things I have learned, that I have seen, that I never would have if I was not who and what I am. For today, I can live with my life just as it is, and I thank the Goddesses for that. ▼

Cook County Building on Clark Street.

They unfurled a banner reading, "We demand equal health care now!" and gave raised-fist salutes before being violently removed by Chicago Police some 15 minutes later.

Another crescendo was reached several minutes earlier when about 25 women blocked the key intersection of Clark and Randolph Streets with old mattresses. The women lay down as other protesters told passersby that the mattresses constituted the only AIDS ward for women in Cook County. The AIDS ward at Cook County Hospital in Chicago currently does not admit women.

Throughout the lengthy demo, activists chanted: "Health care is a right, not just for the straight and white;" and, "We're here, we're queer, and we're not going shopping."

ACT UP's Daniel Sotomayor, a political cartoonist with this magazine, charged that police were overly aggressive all day long. Speaking to reporters about half-way through the protests, he said, "We've been clubbed, kicked, beaten; they're fucking vicious."

Police Chief Leroy Martin later told reporters that Sotomayor was mistaken, predicting that no police violence would be visible "on the 5:00 news."

The morning of April 24, however, activists held a press conference in Loop at which they displayed the injuries of five protestors, all of whom said they had been beat up by the police.

Also targeted during the protests was the American Medical Association, which opposes nationalized health care.

An AMA spokesman told reporters that the association has a better plan, which it calls "Health Access America." The plan places a greater burden for the nation's health care on private employers. ▼

NEW YORK—Far and away the largest AIDS-related demonstration ever, over 50,000 people, most of them from New York's Haitian community, poured into the streets of lower Manhattan April 20. They were protesting new Food and Drug Administration guidelines that suggested prohibiting Haitians and people from Sub-Saharan Africa from donating blood. Although associated with AIDS early in the epidemic, the incidence of AIDS among Haitians is actually not significantly higher than the incidence in the population as a whole, according to news reports. The FDA is reportedly reconsidering its guidelines.

Who are we?

Formed in 1986 Buddies 'n' Pals 'n' Partners is a computer dating service. Our goal is to help you meet someone compatible, both socially and sexually, as a friend or a lover.

How does your service work?

When your application is received it is entered into our computer system, the computer assigns you a client number. It then compares each of your attributes to those of all the other clients currently in our database, eliminating those members having too many traits you have classed as undesirable and retaining those that meet your requirements.

The report you receive will contain the following information about your matches: A client identity number, a mini-profile listing all the attributes the client used to describe himself, as well as the authorized contact information provided by the client. Our double screening process ensures that you meet the other clients' requirements.

Your client number is used to allow us to verify your identity when you call our office, you are the only one who should know this code.

How much does it cost?

Our service is currently $35, which includes a one-time processing charge and your print-out of the top 15 matches from our current data base. As well, you automatically receive a six month membership during which other members may be matched with you; they will receive the authorized contact information you have provided. You can know of these matches only when they contact you.

You may also order our MatchPlus service for $55.00. This fee includes 30 client matches and a 6 month membership for MatchPlus service customers. You may update your contact at any time without charge.

What else do I need to know?

Members agree that the information they provide is complete and accurate. As well, that any information they receive from us is confidential, for their personal use only, in accordance with the objectives of the service.

We reserve the right to decline applications for any reason, if an application is declined a full refund will be issued. We also reserve the right to terminate any membership without refund if the information provided is found to be deliberately incomplete, untrue or deceptive.

How do I fill out the Application Form?

We know you have reading instructions, but in order for us to provide you with the best possible service, please read these instructions carefully before filling out your Buddies 'n' Pals 'n' Partners Application Form.

At first 191 questions may seem a bit overwhelming, but, in fact, filling out the Application Form is really not that difficult if you follow these four steps:

STEP 1:

Fill in the section entitled Membership Information (For office use only). Enter your name, full mailing address, zip code, phone number. (We will contact you by phone only if you include a phone number here). A mailing address is required for sending match lists.

STEP 2:

Complete the Contact Information section and sign the disclaimer. The contact information you provide here will be given to members who match with you. The contact information should include your first name and phone number or a contact address. Use this section to tell members something about yourself, information that would not normally be included in the mini-profile. The use of this section is entirely up to you. However, giving out work phone numbers or home address is strongly discouraged!

STEP 3:

The Boxes on the left hand side of each column are used when the indicated attribute applies to you. Check at least one box per section, only one box in sections which are mutually exclusive (i.e., Age, Height, Hair, Location).

STEP 4:

The words YES, OK and NO to the left of the attribute name describe the type of person you would like to meet. Circle YES when the attribute is strongly desired in a match. Indicating a YES will never disqualify a potential match. Circle OK if it doesn't matter one way or the other. Circle NO if you would not like this attribute in a match. A NO acts as a vote against the person, it does not automatically disqualify them.

Options You Can Live With

There is no cure for HIV. But there is an expanding array of treatment options. The AIDS/HIV Treatment Directory, published by the American Foundation for AIDS Research (AmFAR) is a "user-friendly" guide to the full range of approved and experimental treatments, presented in a clear but comprehensive format for people with HIV disease and their primary-care physicians.

A paid subscription to the Directory is the best way to guarantee receiving this vital information regularly. A subscription is also an ideal way to support the important, on-going efforts of AmFAR to raise desperately needed funds to underwrite research and education about HIV disease. A one-year subscription (4 issues) is only $30.00. To subscribe, or to make a contribution, send your check to AmFAR.

Your options may be greater than you think.

Obituaries

Don St. Patrick Montgomery

Don died on November 29, 1989. He was 30 years old, and he had been fighting AIDS for over two years.

Don was one of the first true queens I met. He helped me come out and was a dear friend. I met Don at my first meeting of Gay People at Columbia (GPC) in late 1982. Thirty of us gay men (the school was not yet co-ed) were squeezed into a basement room in one of the dormitories: politicking, gut-spilling and cruising each other. But Don sat silent on the big old couch, his lips in a pout, eyes wide, legs crossed tightly at the knee, and arms locked around the chest. Every now and then he smiled knowingly at someone. Obviously this was a queen to know.

Indeed, Don was the queen bee of GPC. He chaired the First Friday Dance Committee for two years, and had a hand in nearly all decisions the group made. More importantly, Don caught every nuance of every interaction; his mental tape recorder was always running.

Don was articulate, studious and steadfast in everything he did. He graduated from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and from Columbia Law School with honors. In 1980, Don helped resurrect and organize the Gay Pride March in Ann Arbor. For two years in New York, Don served as Secretary of the Christopher Street Liberation Day Committee (now Heritage of Pride). After passing the bar, he worked for a litigation law firm on Long Island. His illness forced him to retire, and Don subsequently prevailed at the New York Human Rights Commission in his own AIDS discrimination cases, against a dentist and the Jack LaLanne Health Clubs.

Don was generous and considerate even as his health deteriorated. The last evening I spent with him, watching one of the mayoral debates, he was charming and sharp-witted, as always.

Don helped me realize it's okay to act effeminate, okay to swish a little—as long as you keep your wits about you. Don had countless friends, allies, admirers and rivals. We all respected his intuitive sense of human nature, biting humor, quiet pride and commitment to gay rights. I know his loss is deeply felt by all who knew and loved him.

Contributions may be made in Don's name to GMHC.

Gregory Kolovakos

Gregory Kolovakos, a writer, translator of Latin American literature and director of the literature program of the New York State Council on the Arts, died of AIDS Monday morning, April 16, at his home on the Upper West Side. He was 38 years old.

Gregory attended Colgate University and Yale University where he received two masters degrees. He taught and lectured at several schools, most recently at City College where he taught creative translation. He translated works by Jorge Luis Borges, Julio Cortazar, Jose Donoso and Mario Vargas Llosa.

Gregory joined the staff of the New York State Council on the Arts as the director of the literature program in 1979. Over the years he was involved in the funding of hundreds of emerging writers and organizations.

In 1985, Gregory co-founded GLAAD—Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation—along with a handful of other cultural and political leaders. GLAAD was established in response to poor and homophobic reporting of the AIDS crisis in the mainstream press, in particular reporting about the death of Rock Hudson by the New York Post.

Gregory was actively involved in PEN American Center—Poets, Playwrights, Editors, Essayists and Novelists—part of a worldwide writers organization dedicated to freedom of expression. He was a member of the translation committee and Chair of the PEN Fund for Writers and Editors with AIDS, which held a benefit in September 1988 entitled "Playwrights and Poets on Stage." Gregory also co-founded AIDS Treatment Project, which offers financial support to visual artists and writers with HIV disease.

Gregory joined the Board of Directors of the Lesbian and Gay Community Services Center in 1987 and was elected co-chair in 1990. With writer and editor Paula Martinac, he founded "In Our Own Write," the Center's reading series that showcases emerging gay and lesbian authors, giving particular attention to writers of color. President of the Board David Nimmons said, "Gregory infused his work among us with his own deep artistic awareness, reminding us always that activism can be accomplished with pride, grace and wit. During his four years at the Center, he showed by example the spirit and strength that these walls stand for. We are much the richer for his gifts, and will miss him enormously." Memorial donations can be made to the Lesbian and Gay Community Services Center and will go toward establishing the Kolovakos Memorial Lectures on Lesbian and Gay Liberation, a quarterly program that will bring prominent gay and lesbian speakers from around the country.

Gregory is survived by his lover of many years, Bruce Becker.

A memorial service will be held at the Ethical Culture Society, date and time to be announced.

Michael Altman 1942-1990

Michael Altman, psychotherapist, teacher of psychotherapists, former clinical director of Identity House, and former GMHC volunteer, died on March 4 from complications of HIV disease. Michael was born September 28, 1942 and was raised in Bensonhurst, Brooklyn. He received a Masters in Social Work from Hunter College School of Social Work and was trained as a Gestalt psychotherapist by Laura Perls, Isadore From, Richard Kitzler and Patrick Kelley.

His activism goes back to the beginning days of our movement. He was a member of the Gay Liberation Front and participated in many of the early demonstrations for gay rights.

In 1972, he joined Identity House, a gay and lesbian peer counseling organization, and was a leader of the organization through the 1970s and 1980s. He served in a number of elected positions with that organization during critical periods in its development. For several years, he was Identity House's representative to the New York City Department of Mental Health, and was a psychotherapist and supervisor there until death. As a volunteer with GMHC early in the epidemic, he facilitated the first peer support group for volunteers established by that organization in 1983.

Michael touched many people in his life: in his practice, in his teaching, in his caring, in his healing. His loved ones, his family, his friends, his colleagues, his students, his patients.

He is survived by his lover of 12 years, Jose Anselmi, and his sister, Caroline Brenner.

A memorial service in his honor will be held May 6, 1990, 6:30 pm at the Gay Synagogue, Bethune St, NYC. All are invited.

Cecile Cammarata

Members of the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation extend their warm condolences to the family of Cecile

Cammarata, who passed away March 28th after a long fight against cancer. Four years ago, she saw the needs and potential of this fledgling activist group. She responded by generously offering the parlour floor of her home as GLAAD's first office space. For one year GLAAD was nurtured with kettles of soup and enthusiasm by Cele and her children, Jon, Alexandra and, especially, Bill Blum—who continues working within the community.

Most of us would have been happy if our parents had joined Parents & Friends of Lesbians and Gays. Cecile was determined to make sure that her son's fight was her own. She gave generously to CLGR, ACT UP, and other community groups. She saw this as a natural extension of her involvement with the civil rights movement, which dated back to the 1960s. She never stopped working, even while she was sick.

Now a major national gay activist group, GLAAD recognizes Cele's wisdom, compassion, contributions, and foresight.

Predicting what he would do after the Frank scandal wound down, Gobie, speaking on Penthouse's 1-900 line had stated he had wanted to return to a less public life.

"I hope to walk away from this and start a new life," Gobie had concluded. "A more traditional, typical lifestyle. And work a regular job."

Meanwhile, Capitol Hill insiders are now speculating that the House ethics committee investigating Frank at his request on charges stemming from his relationship with Gobie may turn in their report before Congress returns from Easter recess.

A spokesman for Rep. William Dannemeyer (R-Calif.) has stated that should the ethics committee not order Frank expelled from the House, the anti-gay California Republican will himself introduce a motion to expel the Massachusetts congressman when the Congress convenes again.

ddI Risks Perspective and Precautions

by John S. James

Recently there has been much publicity about the risks of using the experimental AIDS treatment ddI. Some of the reporting has been misleading and unnecessarily frightening. But some risks are real, and experts recommend simple precautions that anyone using ddI should begin immediately.

Background

ddI is an antiviral in the same general class as AZT. It may be about equally effective, although no one knows for sure until trials are completed. There is much interest in ddI, not because it is believed to be better than AZT, but because the toxicities of the drugs are different, and also because ddI may work even after AZT has become less effective, as it does for some patients after a year or two of use. ddI is important because it provides another therapeutic option, with its own profile of risks and benefits.

Three major clinical trials (named ACTG 116, ACTG 117 and ACTG 118) are now testing ddI. In addition to these formal trials, Bristol-Myers, the company developing the drug, has made it available without charge through an expanded access program to patients who cannot enter the formal trials and cannot use AZT—persons with no other treatment options. At this time, about 700 people are in the formal trials, and about 8,000 additional people are receiving the drug through the expanded access program.

On March 4-7, hundreds of AIDS researchers from around the country met near Washington D.C., at a conference of the AIDS Clinical Trials Group (ACTG). This quarterly meeting is closed to the press and the public, but important news gets out. At this meeting, physicians heard the latest safety reports on the ddI trials and expanded access program, and exchanged information about their own experience with the drug. They learned that at least one patient in the formal trials and six in the expanded access program have died of pancreatitis, believed to have been caused by ddI. This death rate is about one in a thousand for both programs. (Over 30 non-fatal cases of pancreatitis have also been reported.)

The difference in death rates between the formal ddI trials and the expanded-access program is almost certainly caused by the fact that many of the patients receiving the drug through expanded access were more seriously ill.

The total deaths from all causes (including the pancreatitis) is two of the 700 in the formal trials, and 290 of the 8,000 in the expanded-access program. While the data has just begun to be analyzed, this difference in death rates between the formal trials and the expanded-access program is almost certainly caused by the fact that many of the patients receiving the drug through expanded access were more seriously ill. Patients selected for trials are usually well enough to be expected to survive the trial, whereas many enter the expanded-access program as a last resort. There is no evidence that ddI contributed to these deaths (other than those caused by pancreatitis), and no reason to believe that receiving the drug was any more risky in the expanded-access program than in the trials. The safety monitoring is similar in both programs.

Researchers suspect that ddI did contribute to the pancreatitis deaths, because the very severe and rapidly developing pancreatitis had not previously been expected with AIDS. Other drugs or diseases may also have contributed; intravenous pentamidine, for example, can also cause pancreatitis. All data from these cases will be analyzed to determine (1) is there is a dose-response relationship, with those receiving more drug per body weight at greater risk, and (2) if any cofactors, such as other drugs, were present more often in those patients who did get pancreatitis than in those who did not. If the answer to either question is yes, then ddI could be used more safely by adjusting the dose, or by stopping or not using the drug if any dangerous cofactor is present.

The much larger number of deaths from other causes will also be investigated, especially to see whether ddI may have contributed to any of them.

Precautions

The FDA has asked Bristol-Myers to write to all physicians who are using ddI, to inform them of recommended precautions. Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Times quoted Robert Yarchoan, of the U.S. National Cancer Institute, on precautions patients should take now. Dr. Yarchoan has run the longest clinical trial of ddI, at the National Cancer Institute, and is probably the world expert on the use of the drug.

"Patients receiving ddI who develop abdominal pain [which can be the first symptom of pancreatitis] should probably stop the drug immediately and consult their physicians as soon as possible. They should also not drink alcohol, and their physicians should try to avoid prescribing medications that might cause pancreatitis." (Dr. Yarchoan, quoted in the Los Angeles Times, March 10, 1990.) Other experts have noted that anyone on ddI who develops pneumocystis and must be treated with intravenous pentamidine should stop using ddI while on the pentamidine.

A major problem in treating the pancreatitis believed to be caused by ddI is that it can progress so rapidly that it is difficult to diagnose in time. Other researchers have recently made progress in diagnosing serious pancreatitis, for example, by testing for trypsinogen activated peptide in the urine. We do not know if this test is yet available, or if it would be useful in the ddI trials or expanded-access program.

Perspective

Before the above information about the risk of ddI was available, AIDS Treatment News had heard both good and bad reports about the drug, but mostly good. ddI seems to have made a dramatic difference for many people; we suspect that many who are now alive would not be without it. We had also heard of a number of cases where people had to stop using this drug because of side effects.

Dr. Yarchoan told The Wall Street Journal (issue of March 12) that it was "absolutely necessary to go forward with phase two, or effectiveness studies," the formal clinical trials mentioned above. "Only then can you put the toxicity in the context of benefits and go on."

Drug-development experts consider this finding of toxicity with ddI not at all unusual, except for the fact that this drug trial is being conducted in a fishbowl of public attention. Initial studies gave the drug to only a few dozen people. Problems which rarely occur would not be likely to show up until later trials, when more patients are receiving the drug.

News of the deaths in the ddI program was published in the Los Angeles Times on March 10, and in The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal

Quack-Busters

Victory Over the AIDS Treatment Blacklist

by Bob Lederer

In the annals of the AIDS struggles, victories are few and far between, so it's worth pausing to celebrate them. In early April, insurance attorney Grace Powers Monaco withdrew her Emprise Corporation's application for federal funding of a computerized database of "unproven AIDS remedies"—five months after ACT UP/NY launched a national "Open Letter" campaign to defeat it.

ACT UP/NY charged that the planned database, to be added to numerous medical computer banks, amounted to a blacklist. In a similar cancer treatment project, the "expert evaluators" chosen by Monaco and her insurance consultant friends had long records as virulent anti-alternative-healthcare propagandists (self-styled "quack-busters"). The AIDS project's negative evaluations of unapproved therapies used (sometimes effectively) by PWAs—from acupuncture to herbs to nutritional supplements—would have discouraged doctors and patients from using them, insurance companies from reimbursing them and government researchers from studying them—in short, an attack on PWA freedom of choice and access.

In 1989, the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) granted Emprise a $47,000 pilot grant. The company's follow-up request for an undisclosed amount (an estimated $500,000) was to have been considered at a May 21 NIAID Advisory Council meeting.

Meanwhile, over 30 AIDS service, PWA and activist groups had signed ACT UP's anti-blacklist Open Letter (with the list growing weekly); the National Association of People With AIDS revoked its 1989 letter to NIAID endorsing the project; the ACLU AIDS

Project was helping with legal research; lesbian/gay and AIDS publications nationwide were debating the issue; Congressperson Ted Weiss was investigating conflict of interest by Emprise. And ACT UP/NY was readying a much broader campaign of letter-writing, phone calls and press releases—to culminate at the May 21 council meeting mined that we did not wish to put up with the harassment all over again in the AIDS area that we did in the cancer area. So we have withdrawn our grant application."

Her reference to "harassment...in the cancer area" alludes to last year's intense but unsuccessful effort by organizations advocating freedom of choice in cancer treatments to stop National Cancer Institute funding for Monaco's cancer database; that blacklist will ultimately become reality. Last fall, those cancer activist groups shared key government documents and experiences with ACT UP for its campaign. In February, those organizations and holistic health groups joined AIDS groups in a coalition to fight Emprise.

But did Emprise surrender or was it defeated? In a vituperative April 2 letter to me in my ACT UP capacity, Emprise's "Medical Director" Saul Green (biochemist consultant to Aetna, Prudential and John Hancock insurance companies) may have let the cat out of the bag: "I have just been unofficially informed that our grant proposal was not approved for funding. Knowing what I do about the way your organization works and the way that your new allies operate, I must conclude that this decision by the NIAID was at least in part influenced by the pressure of lobby groups like yours." (NIAID officials refused to comment, citing alleged restrictions on revealing grant status before approval.)

Green, a longtime anti-alternatives crusader, continued: "I have seen your slogan around town, SILENCE IS DEATH! I believe it is true. Your efforts in collaboration with the snake oil establishment in the U.S. has effectively silenced our effort...If silence is death, then your effort to silence us will certainly result in the deaths of desperate, where "stop the blacklist" would have been an added demand at ACT UP's "Storm the NIH" national demonstration targeting the agency's virtual refusal to broaden treatment research beyond AZT and its analogues.

Voluntary Surrender or Threatened Defeat?

For Emprise, the end was dramatic. In an April 5 letter to ACT UP member Mark Harrington, Monaco wrote that she and her colleagues "deter-frightened patients who fall for the sales pitches of the quacks. The experience in Guayana [sic] with 903 victims of Jim Jones' promises and sale of false hope has obviously taught you and your colleagues nothing."

Behind Green's rantings lies a deep elitism reflected in his retort to ACT UP's letter seeking community support. To the closing sentence, "Together we can work to keep the evaluation of AIDS treatments in the hands of our community," Green snarls, "Are you qualified by anything other than AIDS to do this? Is a person with a broken bone qualified to do orthopedics?"

Green has unwittingly exposed the anti-empowerment stance of Emprise and the whole "quack-busting" campaign by the medical profession, insurance industry, pharmaceutical industry and government drug bureaucracy. The issue is not qualification to practice medicine, but to choose it, based on an informed examination of the options. That kind of self-empowerment—so boldly seized by courageous PWAs more "expert" than their doctors—terrifies Green and his ilk.

Why? Because it offers the prospect, rapidly developing in the AIDS field, that entire medical systems different from standard drug-oriented medicine, will develop greater following and stature. Whether based on carefully developed Third World experience or modern Western biological research and nutrient extraction, these systems lack the profit potential to get medical establishment funding. Emprise's defeat may herald changes in that balance of power.

More Battles Ahead

But the battle is far from over. Unconventional doctors continue to be harassed; herbs, nutritional supplements and inexpensive drugs are almost never researched; alternative therapies are rarely covered by insurance; and the real rip-offs and false claims of some "New Age healers" remain mostly unchallenged.

Meanwhile, Monaco has announced she will continue to pursue her blacklist with a slicker cover. According to AIDS Treatment News of April 6, Monaco "is working with universities and others to determine how 'Some militant homosexuals have come up with a new idea for exaggerating their importance and getting themselves invited onto TV talk shows in need of addle-brained guests.

Those comments were written by syndicated columnist Mike Royko, who is based at the Chicago Tribune. He was writing about "outing," which refers to exposing the homosexuality of people who are famous, such as Out-Week magazine's recent exposé on Malcolm Forbes.

There is no consensus of opinion regarding outing in the gay and lesbian community—it's a complex issue that we're still debating. But Royko totally ignored that. In fact, he didn't discuss outing much at all; he merely used it as a pretext to drag out some shopworn stereotypes about gays.

In his column, Royko imagined the reaction of a hypothetical businessman who had been outed as "my boss was very understanding, and said he would write a glowing reference letter to the hairstyling school of my choice." In Royko's fevered imagination, the businessman concluded that he'd become tranquil when "I shoot that son of a bitch that opened my closet door."

Royko completely reduces homosexuality to sexual practices between males with comments like: "what a couple of consenting males choose to do with their genitalia is their own concern..."

If Royko is really interested in discussing outing, stereotypes of our community and gay lifestyles are irrelevant. And invoking the language of hate in a nationally syndicated column contributes to violence against lesbians and gay men.

Write to the editor of the Chicago Tribune and ask that Royko and the senior staff of the paper meet with local gay and lesbian activists to be-

[such a] database could be resubmitted under other auspices, so that the project can proceed with a more collegial relationship."

Monaco must be made to understand that no university or research organization which works with the likes of Emprise will ever develop a "collegial relationship" with the AIDS community.

Alternative/complementary treatment advocates very much seek scientific evaluation of such therapies, but not through biased "critiques." Control over the evaluation process must be kept in the hands of the AIDS community. We welcome proposals for community-based clinical trials programs (community research initiatives) or similar organizations to carry out such research. Let's mark the defeat of Monaco's scheme as a victory for AIDS community education and mobilization, while keeping vigilant against any repackaging of the Emprise blacklist. DDI from page 33 and the Washington Post on March 12.

These four newspapers are especially important, because most of the press follows their lead in selecting and framing the news. The coverage in The New York Times was more negative and alarming than that in the other three, and it has been widely criticized. Later articles, in The Wall Street Journal on March 13 and in The New York Times on March 19, put the risks in better perspective.

Despite the new information about the risks of ddi, we still consider ddi to be one of the most important new treatment possibilities. It would be tragic to lose this drug—or to lose the concept of parallel track or early access to treatment—due to hasty decisions not based on careful assessment of all the facts.

NOTE: The related drug ddC has not been found to cause pancreatitis.

THE FIRST TIME I saw him I could hardly believe my eyes. His naked body was awesome, the shoulders broad enough to fill a doorway. The sculpted mass of his chest was covered with soft brown fur, as were his powerful arms and legs. His thick, uncut cock could keep a boy busy for days on end. And the face—deep, dark eyes, aquiline nose, lush moustache—was the soulful essence of Latin masculinity.

This man who riveted my gaze, this cynosure hunk, was called Bruno—or so claimed the caption under his photos in the magazine. And, almost as astonishing as Bruno's superb face and physique was the magazine's revelation that he was, yes, gay. Openly and unabashedly so.

When I first encountered Bruno in the mid-1970s, I was taking my first tentative steps out of the closet. I'd managed to seduce, thanks to dope and booze, a few of my closest straight buddies, but I kept my distance from real gay men and the "gay scene." In my fear and ignorance, I believed that to be gay meant to become a stereotype: effeminate, limp of wrist, hysterically devoted to Judy Garland. Sure, I dug men, but that image wasn't me.

What Bruno's pictures in the magazine did for me (besides providing abundant fantasy fodder) was to offer the alternative image of homosexuality that I craved. If this guy could be gay, then why couldn't I? Not only was he a fantastic sex object, he was also a role model. I could desire him, and desire to be like him.

The magazine that brought me Bruno was called Mandate, and over the next months, and for several years, I discovered in its pages more great-looking, masculine guys who redefined for me my image of gay manhood. And I came to realize that this new image of muscled bodies and assertive butch sexuality represented a profound change occurring throughout gay male culture in the 70s: out with the sissy, in with the clone.

By the early 1980s I was openly gay, living with a lover, and working as a writer and editor for Modernismo Publications, Ltd., the company that published Mandate. I was part of a five-man editorial and production team that each month put together Mandate, as well as its baby brothers, Honcho and Playguy. At the time Mandate was hybrid of nude male photospreads, hardcore porno stories and general interest feature articles and reviews. The other two magazines were strictly sex, Honcho quasi-S&M and mildly kinky, Playguy more oriented to younger, boyish models.

My editorial duties at Modernismo ran the gamut of writing "boy copy," the captions for the photospreads ("He's played hard on the soccer field, and now it's time to strip off that sweaty jersey..."), to jerk-off fiction (under the nom de porn, "Mario Mangiacazzo"), to feature articles about travel, the arts and gay politics.

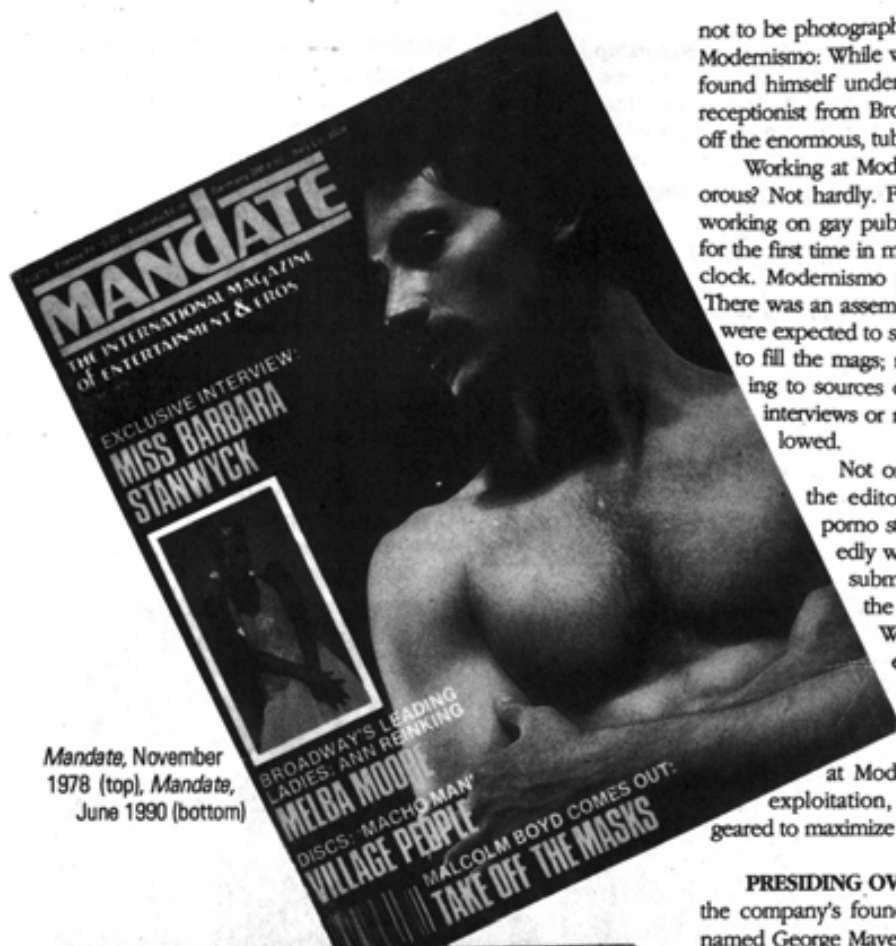

Upon learning that I worked at Modernismo, some people assumed the gig must be all sexy fun and gay glamor. As if we lounged around all day in our jockstraps while hot porno models poured into the offices to be photographed, and maybe, in exchange for a cover shot, flung themselves on our editorial casting couches.

But no porno sexpots were ever snapped at Modernismo; the art directors selected the pictures from slides shown them by the photographers. During my two-and-a-half years at the company, the only porno star I ever met was Al Parker (not Bruno, alas), and he came in to sell some of his own pictures, not to be photographed. (My fondest memory of Mr. Parker at Modernismo: While waiting at the front desk one afternoon, he found himself under the rapt gaze of Renee, the big-haired receptionist from Brooklyn, who couldn't take her wide eyes off the enormous, tuberous bulge in his 501s.)

Working at Modernismo could be fun at times, but glamorous? Not hardly. For the first time I was "out on the job," working on gay publications with other openly gay men. But for the first time in my journalism career I had to punch a time clock. Modernismo resembled a factory in other ways, too. There was an assembly-line aspect to editorial production. We were expected to stay at our desks all day churning out copy to fill the mags; normal journalistic practices, such as talking to sources on the phone or leaving the office to do interviews or research, were frowned upon, if not disallowed.

Not only did I and the other two members of the editorial staff crank out articles, boy copy, porno stories and the letters to the editor supposedly written by readers, we also edited freelance submissions and proofread all the material for the three magazines after it had been typeset. We were underpaid for these "diversified" editorial duties (the art directors got more; after all, it was the pictures that sold the magazines) and benefits were minimal.

In other words, the price of being out at Modernismo and doing gay journalism was exploitation, and acceptance of working conditions geared to maximize output, not foster creativity.

PRESIDING OVER THE Modernismo fantasy factory was the company's founder and owner, a Canadian heterosexual named George Mavety. A man of Falstaffian proportions and a chainsmoker (you could locate him during his frequent peregrinations through his corporate domain by following the trail of ash), Mavety was a mercurial character given to backslapping bonhomie one minute and explosions of bad temper the next.

He was also one savvy businessman. In 1974, Mavety saw in the emergence of the post-Stonewall urban gay male "lifestyle" a potential market for a slick, nationally-distributed, monthly, gay magazine. Mavety knew the business end of publishing (he'd been publishing and distributing what's known in the trade as "men's sophisticates"—hetero skin mags); he needed a gay collaborator for the new venture. He enlisted John Devere, who had been editing and publishing a cosy, After Dark-ish arts and entertainment magazine called Dilettante.

When Dilettante folded, Mavety told Devere that he would back a new, explicitly gay lifestyle magazine if Devere would be the editor. "He offered to run the business end, and I would have total editorial control of the new magazine," recalls Devere. "And he made good on that promise."

Devere, a former professor of comparative literature and a self-described "artsy-fartsy culture vulture," envisioned a magazine that would combine in-depth arts and entertainment coverage, gay lifestyle features and nude male photography. In April 1975, Mandate made its debut as the "magazine of eros and entertainment."

"There was nothing else like it at the time," claims Devere. Blueboy and In Touch, two other gay male magazines, appeared at roughly the same time as Mandate, but they were not published monthly, were distributed less widely and lacked Mandate's distinctive editorial mix. An issue of the magazine might feature an interview with Harvey Milk or Bette Davis, a fashion spread photographed in Egypt and an excerpt from a gay-themed book such as Edmund White's States of Desire or Seymour Kleinberg's Alienated Affections. And, of course, pictures of naked guys.

The black-and-white nude male photography was supplied by the likes of Jim French (Colt Studios), Roy Blakey, Roy Dean and Target Studios, all of whom specialized in muscular, masculine-looking models. (Devere, art director as well as editor, selected the photos.)

"They were men with extraordinary

The Mineshaft mindset began to dictate the evolution of Modernismo Publications

WHAT GEORGE MAVETY began with one artsy-sexy gay magazine in 1975 has grown into a diversified publishing corporation comprising a dozen mass market, slick gay men's magazines. (Mavety continues to publish straight sex magazines, including such titles as Juggs, Hooters and Oralrama.) Besides Mandate, Honcho and Playguy, The Mavety Media Group, as the company is now called, owns All Man, Friction, Heat, Honcho Overload, Inches, Male Insider, Stallion, Torso and Uncut.

Mavety founded some of these magazines; others he acquired from their original owners, such as Friction, which he bought from Liberation Publications, publisher of The Advocate. Over the past 15 years Mavety has managed not only to open up a market for gay skin magazines but virtually corner it. Though he doesn't bodies who any hetero woman would want to go to bed with," Devere laughs.

"The nudes," he says, "did sell the magazine, but there were also articles worth reading and talking to your friends about."

Although magazine wholesalers and retail outlets were initially hesitant to carry the new publication, resistance waned as sales figures climbed in the major U.S. cities where Mandate was available. Monthly circulation topped off at about 110,000, according to Devere—a figure no gay publication had attained or matched since. Mandate's success spawned the soft-core porno magazines Honcho and Playguy; they were created, says Devere, "to use all the extra photos we didn't have room for in Mandate." Toward the end of the evolution" of all three Modernismo publications, he says. "I knew Mavety wanted to phase out" the original Mandate format. "Everything was going in that direction."

Devere responded to the zeitgeist and his publisher's inclinations. Mandate started carrying porno stories and the nude photography got progressively raunchier, with close-ups of hard-ons and assholes. Devere says he had nothing against the trend toward raunch; it simply didn't interest him. He left Modernismo in 1980 to start his own greeting cards company, serving as a part-time consultant to Modernismo until Mavety brought on a new team of editors and art directors for his expanding enterprise.

exactly have a monopoly on gay skin mags, he owns more of them than anyone else in the business.

A likely effect of Mavety's near-monopoly is to discourage other would-be publishers of gay erotic magazines from entering an already crowded market. And what about the fact that a straight man is profiting from packaging and selling us our sexual fantasies? Gay men may take the photos and write the stories that appear in Mavety's magazines, but they do not control the production or distribution of these publications. And certainly the profits don't go back into the gay community.

FIVE YEARS AFTER leaving his employ, I'm interviewing Mavety at his corporations' offices on lower Broadway. When he greets me, I fail to recognize him for a second; he's shed all his former corpulence and is now downright slim. During the interview he speaks in soft, measured tones, with none of the old bluster. Unaccustomed to being interviewed ("I've turned down Newsweek," he tells me) he carefully weighs his words, but apparently that's not the only reason for the new soft-spokenness. "I've mellowed a lot since the old days," he says.

Mavety wants to talk mostly about the persistence of homophobia in American society and the problems of being a publisher of gay sex magazines—two inseparable issues for him.

"There's still tremendous non-acceptance of the gay lifestyle in the hinterlands," he says. "I hoped there would've it's difficult to gauge the boundaries of permissibility. The models display erections, but they don't ejaculate or otherwise engage in overt sexual activity. The fiction, says Mavety, cannot include descriptions of S&M or bondage; also verboten, say former staffers, is any mention of man-boy love and watersports. (And anything remotely suggestive of bestiality, as former editor Steven Danbach learned after he published a porno story in which a cat climbs in bed with two naked lovers, who commence fucking. Danbach says Mavety "flipped out" when he came across this scene of petophilia.)

"Lots of people think that because I publish all these magazines selling for $4.95 I must be making millions," says Mavety. "Certainly I'm in business to make out of the gay market after having worked so hard to cultivate it. "Besides," he adds, "I wouldn't want to give in to censorship. I consider myself a liberal thinker, and a maverick in my own way."

JUST HOW PROFITABLE are Mavety's magazines? His is a privately-held corporation, and he does not disclose circulation or sales figures. At its peak in the mid-70s, Mandate might have sold 110,000 copies a month, but back then there was much less competition. Today, with so many gay magazines on the market, Mavety's and others, it's unlikely that sales of any of Mavety's titles come close to that figure.

A general rule in magazine publishing is that publishers sell about half the magazines they print. To sell 110,000 copies of been more progress by now, but I think there's actually more homophobia out there today" [than when he began publishing his gay magazines]. Though he spends "hundreds of thousands of dollars" to market the magazines, "there are still places in the country, mainly in the South and Midwest, where you can't get in for love or money."

Outside urban America, many retailers "are frightened to death" to stock gay publications. "If you have a little store in Alabama, are you going to argue that gay people have a right to buy this material?"

To keep the magazines on the market, "we make damn sure we fall within the unwritten guidelines of what's permissible." But with "community standards" varying across the United States,

The current crop of gay skin magazines make no pretense of raising gay consciousness money, but you won't get rich selling gay magazines. With all the problems it brings, gay publishing has to be a labor of principle or love."

Mavety says it'd be "foolish" to pull

Mandate a month would necessitate a press run of about 200,000 copies. An industry veteran interviewed for this article strongly doubts that Mavety Media Group prints that many copies of Mandate. His best guess is that Mavety's most popular titles might sell around 25-35,000 copies.

But with printing costs of 40 to 60 cents per magazine, as the industry analyst estimates, Mavety stands to make a pretty fair profit on a magazine he sells for five dollars, even after marketing and distribution costs.

John Devere claims Mandate, Honcho and Playguy were not huge money-makers in the early years, "and I saw the balance sheets." With the hetero skin mags providing a cushion, Mavety, according to Devere, was able to develop and expand the gay market. "His slow accretion of gay magazines must, by this point, have become very profitable."

"That's some of the biggest bullshit I've ever heard," snaps John Preston, when told that George Mavety had called gay publishing a labor of love or principle. "I can't believe for a minute that he sees it that way. He just saw a market and exploited it."

Preston, a well-known gay author and journalist, worked at Modernismo for a year-and-a-half during the late

70s, writing articles and sex stories for the three original magazines. Back then, under John Devere's editorship, "Mandate was a real magazine," he says. "It had some real literary and political value. Ten years ago, it was also one of the few publications that regularly reviewed gay books."

For budding gay writers, magazines like Mandate "were valid places for us to write and find our audiences. Now there's a gay writers movement," notes Preston, "but it used to be that the skin magazines were our only outlet, our apprenticeship."

Preston now lives in Maine, where he has been interviewing local men for an oral history project. Not a few of these men, he reports, told him that Mandate and other gay slicks "were an announcement of a world to which they could belong" when they felt isolated in their closets. The magazines gave them a window on a culture, a way of life—albeit one stratified by race (most of the models were white) and class (the lifestyle articles and the advertisements promoted middle class, consumerist values).

The magazines also helped some men to acknowledge their sexuality. "They'd be in a store, pick up a copy of Mandate and see someone so overwhelmingly attractive they could no longer deny that they were homosexual," says Preston.

Sounds familiar. As Michael Bronski observed in his book Culture Clash: The Making of Gay Sensibility, magazines like Mandate, Honcho, Blueboy, In Touch, etc., "made images of gay male sexuality available to a large number of people, an especially important thing for gay men who may be insecure in their identities."

WHAT DO YOU GET when you plunk down $4.95 for one of these magazines today? Glossy color photospreads and stroke stories, and there's little to distinguish Mandate from Honcho from Playguy from Torso. A non-sex feature occasionally appears in Mandate (what remained of the mixed format was eliminated several years ago) or Torso, and the latter runs short book reviews. But basically the mags merit Steven Danbach's dismissal of them as "processed porn."

And how could it be otherwise? I thought Modernismo was a factory when I worked there in the early 80s, but it was a Mom and Pop operation compared to the setup at Mavety Media Group. Editor-in-chief Stan Leventhal and his three-man staff produce eight magazines, five of them monthlies. With so many pages to fill and so many deadlines to meet, Leventhal and crew could hardly be expected to shape a distinct editorial personality for each magazine, like John Devere did for Mandate.

The current crop of gay skin magazines, Mavety's and those of other publishers, make no pretense of raising gay consciousness or defining a culture. They don't need to, because today's young gay men, unlike my generation, have so many more sources of information, thanks to the expansion of gay publishing during the past 15 years.

The "gal slicks" now deal solely in sexual fantasy. The quality of the photography varies, and the models may or may not turn you on. The fiction is usually mundane, mechanical stuff. But whatever the quality of these magazines, they remain, even in the age of home video viewing, important to gay men's sexual culture.

Their continued presence has broader significance in American society. That these magazines remain available on newsstands, where thousands of men can buy them, is, if not liberation, at least a rebuke to the right-wing censorious brigades so intent on suppressing all images of gay sexuality. ▼

The Rainbow run for the end of AIDS is a 1,000 mile run from San Francisco to Vancouver. Brent begins June 7 and arrives in Vancouver on August 4 to attend The Gay Games.

Brent will dedicate the Rainbow Run to two leaders of the gay and lesbian community: Dr. Tom Waddell, founder of The Gay Games, and artist and activist Keith Haring—both cut down by AIDS.

Carrying a Rainbow Flag—the symbol of the gay & lesbian community—Brent will make appearances at fundraisers in major cities along the route, raising money and awareness for local AIDS groups.

The Rainbow Run needs your financial support. And we need volunteers on the East and West Coasts to distribute leaflets, coordinate publicity, and sell t-shirts and buttons. Will you go the distance with us?

When Greg Louganis showed up at Macy's last week to sign autographs and help push his new line of Speedo swimwear, he had no idea that lesbian and gay activists would besiege him to put his John Hancock on faux Wheaties boxes they designed which featured his bod on the box. (For the uninitiated, Wheaties dropped Louganis as a would-be sponsor back when he was an Olympic hero, and GLAAD put up a tough, though unsuccessful, fight, charging homophobia—even though the sexy swimmer never said he was gay and still nervously sloughs off the issue.)

Louganis, we're told, was cordial and sweet as the activists—an as yet officially unnamed group which is thus far going under the moniker Queer Nation—told him that they were proud to have him as one of them and urged him to come out and be a role model as he eagerly signed the boxes of Wheaties. But dear Greg did decline to sign one man's copy of Outweek.

OUT OF MY HANDS

BY BRADLEY BALL

The plan couldn't have been any simpler and, in fact, breathtaking simplicity was its chief attraction: I would go to a restaurant as an openly gay man, I would order a meal in an openly gay manner, I would pay for the meal with an openly gay charge card and I would report on the event in an openly lesbian and gay weekly newsmagazine, recounting how I had confronted heterosexist oppression at its very source and dealt it the resounding blow of visibility. That was the idea as I conceived and pitched it and my editor approved with an affirmative shrug. Of course, any new venture is bound to encounter some initial difficulty, even resistance, and enlisting the aid of a companion wasn't quite as easy as I had hoped. Danny, for example, reiterated his vow that he would never again dine with me in public. Even though I promised him I was on new medication he remained unconvinced. Rhonda, on the other hand, was also starting new medication and didn't want to leave her apartment until it had begun to take effect. Chris said he couldn't go on Thursday because he was facilitating a committee meeting and asked if I could make it Friday but, of course, on Friday I was going to hear Michel Tremblay speak at "The Festival of Canadian Authors." Several others didn't return my call—except for Jack who needed to tell me just exactly how much he hates this new format and just exactly how much I am going to alienate absolutely everybody in the entire world. Left with no alternative, I eventually reached an old "friend" who still had my signed copy of Book of Common Prayer and he agreed to join me on the condition that I not mention his real name and that this, plus the return of the book, would settle our account once and for all.

We agreed to meet beforehand in the revolving cocktail lounge of the Marriott Marquis Hotel. I arrived early, wearing my green cardigan which is right for my coloring and the shirt a salesclerk had assured me was very popular with the young people these days. After two stingers and one circuit past the Camel billboard, X finally showed up, looking a little greyer than I'd remembered. Before even taking his seat, X said, "You wore green the last time," and I suddenly, clearly remembered why it was we hadn't spoken to each other since the Ash Wednesday of 1986. "That time I was happy," I remarked and then asked him if he'd remembered to bring my book. Naturally he had put it out in plain sight the night before and walked out of the apartment that morning without it. I understood. He ordered a Dewar's on the rocks and started picking all the cashews out of the bowl of mixed nuts on the table. We didn't say anything for some time. The pianist returned from his break and started playing Ribbons Down My Back. I lit another cigarette. X finished the cashews and moved on to the hazelnuts. When the Camel billboard reappeared in my peripheral vision he said, "Your beard's starting to get a lot of grey in it." I looked at him and held my glance for one suspended moment while each of us retraced in our own minds the circumstances and expectations that had led us, four years earlier, to say the things we had said in the way that we had said them. Then X shook his head and sighed and said he thought maybe he'd better be going home. I agreed and asked for the bill. He left before I finished paying I went to B. Dalton's, bought a new copy of Book of Common Prayer and tried to think of somebody wise who might still owe me a favor. ▼

Breezing into an ACT UP benefit/talent show at Pyramid last week, I was gleefully assaulted by the zany and talented Ryan "Ivory" Landry, onstage singing Joplin's Take a Little Piece of My Heart, while in drag as Liz Smith and while three oversized, faux OutWeek covers hung in back of him. The first one blared with the headline: LIZ SMITH IS GAY. The second one read: LIZ SMITH IS A MAN. And the third posed an ethical question: LIZ SMITH: NEWSHOUND OR MUFF-DIVER?

I think word is getting out.

Word certainly got around last week when Sally Jesse Raphael canceled a show at the last minute which was to feature Malcolm Forbes' one-time plaything, George Warnock, and a handful of other lovers (both straight and gay) of the rich and famous. Raphael told People Page (Daily News) that she was "uneasy" about interviewing Warnock and "saw no reason to dance on [Forbes'] grave." Her producer, Burt Dubrow, told Page Six (New York Post): "Malcolm Forbes isn't here to defend himself. Let the man rest in peace!"

Suddenly everyone's a moralist. It seems all of these scum-sucking producers and talk show hosts who've put every piece of human trash and garbage on their shows over the years have now developed a sense of ethics when it comes to Malcolm Forbes' lover. As if they've never "danced" on anyone else's graves. As if they've never prevented anyone from "resting in peace."

Sally's publicist, Cindy Schneider, told me: "It has nothing to do with homophobia...We don't shy away from covering homosexuality...The difference is that in the past when we've done shows like that there's been a court case involved, and people were paying attention to it nationally...We'll do it when it's something that people can learn from...But in the case yesterday, there was no reason to tell the story."

Oh, I see.

Dubrow told Page Six: "It was a matter of good taste and honesty from talking to [the lovers of the rich and famous individuals]...and feeling dirty." The segment was replaced with a show about a father who has sex with and married his own daughter.

The interesting thing is that in the item on Page Six, Schneider says, "We didn't want to give these people any more attention than they've already received." And then Richard Johnson, Page Six's editor, adds: "Page Six agrees, which is why the four guests are not named here."

RICHARD, YOU ARE SO FULL OF SHIT. AS IF THE NEW YORK POST HAS BECOME A PARAGON OF SO-CALLED PROPER ETHICS.

You have given space to all sorts of grotesque and opportunistic parasites so that they could peddle their meager wares in your column—from Jessica Hahn and Donna Rice to slime like Alan Rish, R. Couri Hay and the woman who claims to be Jackie Mason's ex-lover complete with the baby she says is his and whom she dresses him up like. She, in fact, is one of the people who was to be on the Sally Jesse Raphael show and who you now won't mention because you're suddenly so moralistic.

Moralism and kissing up seem to be the order of the day.

No, Richard. The real reason you won't mention the names in this case is because of the fact that you don't want to upset the Forbes family. BECAUSE EVEN YOU HAVE BECOME A KISS ASS LIKE THE REST OF THEM.

I mean, am I really supposed to believe that you're suddenly this upstanding citizen or something? Only one day before that item appeared you called me up to tell me about a famous movie actor whom you claim had a gerbil extracted from his asshole the day after the Oscars and you wanted me to investigate it. If you're so fucking moral, why the hell are spreading around such ridiculous, unfounded garbage?

But moralism and kissing up seem to be the order of the day. Tom Stoddard of Lambda Legal Defense has been caught YET AGAIN kow-towing to the great, straight, white patriarchy.

How embarrassing.

Last week, in Newsweek, he said that the worst thing about "outing" is that "it looks mean and nasty. That doesn't advance the gay movement at all."

Oh, really, Tom? Well, I certainly haven't noticed that "being nice" has done anything for the gay movement. In fact, anything that we've obtained has come from being "mean and nasty;" from being rough and tough and saying, "I'm not taking this shit anymore!"

As I'm sure you know, dear, dear Tom, there are those who find ACT UP to be "mean and nasty." Would you therefore say that ACT UP "doesn't advance the gay movement at all?" Would you say that Urvashi Vaid, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force and a woman who stood up and screamed at President Bush during his recent bogus speech, is "mean and nasty," and "doesn't advance the gay movement?" Would you say that Stonewall was "mean and nasty" and therefore a big blunder for this movement?

You might like us all to be sweet and nice and good little boys and girls. Mind our Ps and Qs, right? I suppose we should all be as nice as you were when you COWERED WHILE SERVING ON A MAYORAL TRANSITION TEAM AND BROUGHT US WOODY MYERS AS HEALTH COMMISSIONER.

No. I'll take "mean and nasty" any day.

I suppose if you stay "nice" while I'm being a screaming maniac, it certainly makes even more of the 'phobes sit down to talk with you—because they sure as hell don't want to deal with someone like me. And that is fine, Tom. If that is my role, then so be it.

Look, I realize you've devoted your life to this. And I know you've done some great things; I know you continue to. All I'm saying is: LOOSEN THE FUCK UP A BIT, TOM. Okay? ▼

Out on the Town

With Liz and Sydney

by Liz Tracey and Sydney Pokorny

Sydney: The Palladium, former home of Lambada, hosted the Steven Cohn Party 2, a benefit organized by Kool Komrad Marc Berkley and Bob Caviano and held in honor of the late gay party promoter. Being a child of the house music generation, this night proved to be a retro beat-matched, HI-NRG challenge. But for many of those that attended, it was a nostalgia-filled night as I heard story after story about "the old days." When one otherwise unremarkable song was played, someone turned to me and said, "I'm getting all teary-eyed, I remember dancing to this; whatever happened to couples dancing, you know, the hustle?" I quickly reminded him that thankfully even Lambada is over and out. Others were happy to see faces of old friends and another man told me how wonderful it was to see Sound Factory queen, real girl Christina Visca at the door as she was every Sunday night. Along with the memories, the crowd was treated to a cavalcade of surprisingly politically aware Hot 97 stars and former disco divas. The heat was turned up by a tense diva war waged by Sharon "In the Name of Love" Redd and Brenda "I just had a baby" (the truth-not a song) K. Starr as they both ganged up on Jocelyn "Somebody Else's Guy" Brown. The Village People were scheduled to perform but cancelled and I was truly shattered. I left disappointed but less of a nightlife neophyte than when I entered.

Liz: Cha Cha Fernandez and the Slumlords played at M.K.'s last week, after having appeared in the music section of this very magazine a few weeks back. Having been part of a five-girl Cha Cha Fernandez cult during high school, there was a certain nostalgic tinge to seeing him again. The charm of Cha Cha lies in his rock'n'roll music against glam sparkle scarves worn with hi-tops and a leopard vinyl jacket—sort of a trashy out of the closet Mick Jagger with Cher's hair. The music has improved dramatically since the last time I had seen him—but it's still very straightforward rock'n'roll about mean streets, mean subway trains, mean people and success as a musician (and in the field of love). His lyrics are not gender-specific, ("you" is whoever you want it to be) but Cha Cha's presence speaks volumes into personal pronouns.

The last Earth Day in 1970, I was cavorting in a park with my parents and siblings, toting my tricycle and hitting squirrels with my toy golf set. This Earth Day 1990 was a bit less idyllic. Color me cynical, but NYC just isn't suited to anything environmentally conscious. Cases in point:

- a lot of people took cabs to Central Park.
- closing the streets caused pollution.
- there weren't enough garbage cans uptown to accommodate the influx; more litter.
- not enough food concessions: hence we saw the staff of Earth Day buying meat kebabs on Fifth Avenue.
- the erosion of the great lawn caused dust storms.
- some of those who spoke caused noise pollution.

While there were information booths at the site, I was shocked at how few people took advantage of them. Most of the one million people who stepped on my foot that day were there for two reasons: (1) to drink beer which sells in Odd-lot stores for $5 a case. (1a) To leave that beer behind in the form of liquid waste somewhere in the park. (2) To see the B-52s. During the B-52s, it was so jammed, the gentleman motorcyclist next to us was reduced to jabbing people in the calves with a fork to make them stay off his blanket. Lucky for him, when the band left, so did about half the audience, making the B-52s as popular as the planet that spawned them.

Sydney: At the new afterhours club, Japan, conveniently located in the old Milk Bar (a k a Nimbus 22 which was practically the total capacity of the club), a pre-opening party was held to celebrate the birthday of door-hag-from-Roxy-and-beyond Lincoln Palsgrove IV. Due to the overzealous crackdown by the city, Japan was the only afterhours club open and was filled with a crazy and curious mix of Eurotrash and club people. This is not a dance palace; Japan is more like a friendly neighborhood hangout with off hours. The owners plan to re-open in late May.

Liz: Which transsexual, rising on the nightlife scene (wherever that will lead you), recently told a young lesbian about town she was a lesbian too and asked her out for dinner? Hint: Between she and Adam, there's a garden of Eden.

Sydney: Helmsboro Country was the name of the brilliant Hans Haacke installation at the John Weber Gallery. Haacke, known for his overtly political work, pointed out the link between Phillip Morris, Jesse Helms and the homophobic censorship of Robert Mapplethorpe in a giant cigarette box with a warning label about the evil Senator Helms. Gay and lesbian activists are also planning a boycott of Phillip Morris products in response to that company's donations to the Helms regime. ▼

I used to be cool. I used to be in the know. I used to float in and out of bars, picking up men for my shy men friends and sending them off with a promise to pick them up (with their car) in the morning. I used to know how to flirt. I used to know how to tell lesbians from straight women, and gay men from straight men. I used to live in Philadelphia.

Now I live in New York. Now I read OutWeek. Now I am confused. Now I understand that it's not necessarily because I read OutWeek that I am confused; it may be that I am having a nervous breakdown, or it may be that when I moved here I didn't really know what I thought I knew. It may be that I didn't even know it in Philadelphia. But then, we didn't have OutWeek in Philadelphia. We had the Philadelphia Gay News, and when I didn't understand something, I just asked Tommi.

I've read OutWeek cover to cover for several months, basically from its genesis. I still don't get it. I estimate that I understand the news, the interviews with lesbians, some interviews with men, but rarely anything past page 50 or so (with the exception of the reviews; reviews I understand). First of all, there's this unstated misconception that we (the readers) are supposed to know who they (all the really really important writers) are. Like, we're not supposed to get Liz and Sydney mixed up if we see them in a club, right? Well, I've never met either of them, and unless I play detective with seven or eight issues, there's no way to figure out who is who. Someone suggested to me that I just assume that they are pictured in the same order as their names—Liz, then Sydney. So I think, "OK, maybe that's it." But then I remember that there's this weird thing in New York about gender and sexuality fucks, and so how do I know it doesn't extend to personal identity too?

Then they, and this Michelangelo Signorile guy (boy, man, girl, whohellknows?) who apparently is some big shot since so many people tell him things (although I've never met anyone who knows him) put people's names in bold print like I'm supposed to recognize them. (Actually, Signorile doesn't put names in bold face but rather in CAPITAL LETTERS). Who are these people? Liz Smith I figured out, and a few other people who get on TV, but Amie, and Peter and Janie? I should know these people? Nobody I know knows these people. Maybe we're just not in the right click, but then, I think, "This is OutWeek, the lesbian and gay news magazine, and it is for everybody, right?" And isn't New York full of people who just got here?

Maybe I just must admit that I'm no longer in-the-know. I just don't get it. I've struggled long and hard over several questions, and must finally pose them, if only for the sake of others out there who must also be wondering if they are really out since they don't have this information. Perhaps we should have a support group for people who once thought we were lesbians and gay men but clearly must not be, for we no longer understand the culture. I may be admitting to being uncool, or whatever word New York uses, but the time has come for us to stand up for our right to GET IT!

 - * Couldn't you find a better picture of Chris Farrell?
 - * Does OutWeek only do stories about Black lesbians and gay men during Black History month, or if there is a meeting of 500 or more, or if there is an accompanying photo of dancing or acting or singing?
 - * Why do Mars Needs Men advertisements sometimes have pictures of lesbians on them for the men nights?
 - * Do people really have sex over a computer? What's the point?
 - * Does anyone write when GLAAD asks them to? Or is that column so people can say they wrote and look cool to their in-the-know friends?
 - * Is the Queer Nation a private club?
 - * Is the picture that Liz and Sydney were looking for [in no. 42] the one that showed up on the bottom of their column, and if so, where's the guy mentioned in reference to Polygram records, and if not, where's the photo they so triumphantly found? Was I supposed to KNOW that?
 - * When I finally finish mucking my way through the first section, I arrive at the classifieds. Finally something I'll understand, right? Wrong. How come the Community Directory doesn't ever say when a group is open to anyone not named in the title, or if people can go in just to watch? Who is Raul and why can't he find a place to live? He's been running that ad for months!
 - * Do people who can afford $8,500 for a 1/4 summer share really read OutWeek? Don't they get offended at all this blathering on about bringing rich closets out? Does anyone know any out rich people?
 - * Are Chicks With Dicks women who have dicks or dicks that want to play woman? Back when I was in-the-know, there were lesbians, gay men and drag queens, with the occasional transsexual. What is a female gay boy? [I know Liz and Sydney tried to explain all that, but it didn't sink in]. What does GA mean? and finally, what does "no rubber" in a personal ad mean? No dildoes? No condoms? [The difference is ethical on OutWeek's part.]
- I will probably continue to read OutWeek, much as I continue to read The Bible, really not getting much of it, but thinking there might be something important there somewhere. There must be a solution. Maybe OutWeek could supply a glossary? Or maybe you could add a columnist like me, who is boring and obvious and old-fashioned dykey and opinionated and slightly vulgar. ▼

Naming Names

The Witness Project. Simon Watson and Jerry Saltz, Chairpersons. 241 Lafayette St. New York, NY 10012. (212) 925-1955.

by John Donabue

Each day, three to four envelopes are dropped through the slot of Simon Watson's project space addressed, The Witness Project. Inside is a card listing the name of someone dead from AIDS and information on the person who recorded it. The form is very simple. It asks for the name of the person who died, the date of death and place of residence, followed by a list of 32 art-related vocations.

Begun a year ago by Simon Watson and Jerry Saltz, the Witness Project attempts "in a simple and undramatic way to memorialize people whose lives and life's work have been cut short by AIDS," specifically the arts community. The information collected will be the basis for a computer database, with far-reaching applications both in terms of a commemoration of those dead and as a political tool.

The genesis for the Project was anger and loss. For Simon Watson, who runs the Simon Watson project space on Lafayette Street, a sort of hybrid alternative/commercial art space, it was his rage at the Whitney Museum's reluctance in confronting the devastation of the art world from AIDS in its Biennial. "I was screaming and yelling for six months," he said. "The Witness Project started out of total rage. Here was an end-of-the-80s Biennial and the Whitney couldn't figure out how to address the AIDS crisis."

Writer and art historian Jerry Saltz sees in the Witness Project a chance "to memorialize loss, keep track, name the names." He believes that "anger and activism is not the only way to deal with the AIDS crisis." From his perspective as an historian, Saltz sees, "the body of art taking a blow. Careers are being cut short. There are holes in the atmosphere that cannot be replaced." While acknowledging that AIDS has spared no business or community, Saltz said,

"Art's cultural community is the family I belong to."

The Witness Project grew out of the co-chairs' discussions on responses to the AIDS crisis. Part of its function is an attempt to link mourning and activism. As Saltz says, "It's more than just gathering the names, it's whose gathering the names." Watson agrees, remarking, "The Project helps make the community more aware, tighter."

The Witness Project is still in its formative stages, with all records currently stored in the bottom half of a filing cabinet. The first mailing occurred last December 1, World AIDS Day, when 10,000 forms went out to arts organizations around the country. A computer program is currently under development by California software designer and artist Michael Tidmus which will facilitate data retrieval by various criteria.

In its design, the Project rejects hierarchy; deaths are recorded of painters as well as museum guards, of collectors and film editors, poets and musicians. Said Saltz, "It's not limited to great artists."

The filled-in forms arrive postmarked Dallas, Orlando, Hartford, Oakland, Atlanta. It is difficult to describe the feeling when leafing through the pile. There is a sense of inestimable loss but also a feeling of strength arising from people who won't be silent and who are making their voices heard even in this small way. Some forms come supplied with additional information stapled to the back. To date they have received over 1,000 responses.

One of the Project's goals is to be a resource for other artists to make art, curators to produce shows or editors to collect stories. Some of its uses are as yet unnameable.

Ultimately, Watson also sees the Project as "a powerful national database, a nationwide zap line," that can be activated for political ends. "It has become increasingly apparent that the Right has extraordinary ability to network," he said. The Project hopes to be an equally strong lobbying tool. He envisions focused telegrams to Congress on AIDS issues

Gay Brothers, Sisters, We Don't Need This Fascist Groove Thing

An interview with S3, from the Industrial Dance Band à;GRUMH...

by Madam X

Unbeknownst to many, "industrial" dance music has grown steadily in the past decade, and some of its main proponents are now foraying into the so-called mainstream, with songs becoming club hits and sold-out shows all over the United States, as well as in Europe, where the whole

"I never decided to be open, I just never decided to be hidden. That's also why I have to say that I'm not a gay militant, for the same reason that Peter Gabriel isn't a straight militant."

movement began. The word "industrial" has now lost its specific meaning, as it's been used to describe music made by artists as diverse as Test Department, Ministry or Chris and Cosey. Most of these dance bands have a beat that could be compared only to a runaway train—including the train's sense of subtlety and restraint. To these basic rhythms they add layers upon layers of samples, shouted vocals and loops of programmed keyboards. Many industrial bands adopt an S/M imagery (leather, chains, boots) to better represent their vision of society, a society where relationships are usually master/slave relationships, and where love is defined by, and limited to, sex.

The term "industrial" was originally associated with a musical movement from 15 years ago, when the British experimental band Throbbing Gristle started its own label, Industrial Records. Throbbing Gristle made difficult, arid records, some of them landscapes of pure noise (remember the soundtrack to David Lynch's Eraserhead?); during live performances, band members Genesis P. Orridge and Cosey Fanni Tutti mutilated themselves and licked their own vomit and urine, while half of the sickened audience rushed to the bathroom.

In the early 1980s, the German band Einsturzende Neubauten started using jackhammers and other tools to produce sound, beating on things like lead pipes and oil drums. By the mid-1980s, some (mostly European) bands started to put out records that still emphasized machinery, but this time it was computers. In the tradition of Kraftwerk, they were used to produce rhythms you could dance to. The German band DAF and Britain's Cabaret Voltaire were among them, followed by the Belgian Front 242 and the Canadian Skinny Puppy. In the United States, the technocore dance movement is represented by the Chicago-based Wax Trax! label, distributing many of the aforementioned artists in this country.

NO DUBIOUS SUBTEXT
S3 from à;GRUMH... gets all the essential connections

These artists' obsession with the body may be compared to the punk movement of the late 1970s. But whereas punks hated the body and wanted to mutilate it in order to transcend it, the industrial crowd enhances physical attributes, with uniform-like suits, or, more generally, a careful and loving attention to the visual details which complete their belonging to a genuine subculture (the right haircut, for instance).

Unfortunately, this, just like punk, can be interpreted in several ways. Johnny Rotten (Sex Pistols) used to wear a swastika for its shock value. Now, the Yugoslavian band Laibach explains that the individual is nothing but part of a larger entity—group, nation, whatever. Are they condoning totalitarianism, or do they offer a subtle deconstruction of it? Are they the ultimate pranksters or dangerous theoreticians?

Unfortunately, these aesthetics play on some people's lower instincts, and the results are crowds in which just never decided to be hidden. That's also why I have to say that I'm not a gay militant, for the same reason that Peter Gabriel isn't a straight militant. I don't think that I have to be militant for something that's natural for me. I'm very free and I live my gay life very freely. I wouldn't say that à;GRUMH...s music is gay-oriented. Some of our songs have a gay content, just like we'd talk about Blacks or Jews and everything."

The band isn't afraid to tackle issues directly connected to gay life, like advocating safe sex in unequivocal terms on their latest album A Hard Day's Knight (Wax Trax), with the song Danger Zone. "My ex-ex-boyfriend is now HIV-positive," says S3 "and I'm still having sex with him, because I know what to do not to get AIDS. Although I live with my current boyfriend, I still have relationships with other people. We both are OK about it, as long as it's safe. I hate people who just stop having sexual relationships because of AIDS. There are lots of things you can do that are safe. If a guy who tested positive goes

See S3 on page 60

"The bands are responsible. Anyone who speaks in the media, whose opinions and words are spread through the media, has a responsibility over what they say. That's why I think many bands don't do the right thing, they let things happen."

the dedicated, music-loving lefty types like you and me are elbow to elbow with shaved-head guys wearing menacing boots and occasionally breaking into nazi-like salutes (as witnessed at a Laibach concert in New York City).

And then, once in a while, a techno band like the Belgium-based à; GRUMH... appears, and we can breathe more easily—it is possible to enjoy this hard, electronic music without being bothered by the guilt of a dubious political subtext.

What follows is an interview with S3, who probably wouldn't like to appear as the band's leader, but who writes the music and most of the lyrics, does half of the vocals and is responsible for the long and funny liner notes on the band's records. S3 is also gay, and he can't be bothered to hide it.

Cherries and Oranges

Sexing the Cherry by Jeanette Winterson. Atlantic Monthly Press. $19.95 cl. 167 pp.

by Maria Maggenti

Lies 1: There is only the present and nothing to remember.

Lies 2: Time is a straight line.

Lies 3: The difference between the past and the future is that one has happened while the other has not.

What is the nature of time and existence? Are we always corporeally bound by this moment we call the present or are we instead points of light and matter that transcend history and time, floating from one existence to another depending on our consciousness? How do we know that what we are experiencing in this moment isn't, in fact, related to some other part of ourselves existing elsewhere in a non-linear universe?

These are some of the philosophical questions Jeanette Winterson raises in her third and most ambitious novel to date, Sexing the Cherry. A strange, violent and sometimes delirious tale, Sexing the Cherry uses the first person narratives of two 17th century Britons to pry open conventional understandings of time, space, eternity, love and reality. The results are alternately thrilling and ponderous, demanding an attention to detail and a suspension of disbelief not required in the typical novel. This book expands the intellectual and spiritual concerns Winterson examined in her previous two books, Oranges Are Not the Only Fruit and The Passion, but this piece pushes Winterson's soaring and original voice into a range not seen in her work before.

Jordan and his mother, Dog-Woman, live along the banks of the Thames in the reign of Charles II and observe the gritty landscape of England in 1649 with its attendant political corruption, steaming human waste and natural violence. This is a world of almost unbearable ugliness and torpor but as narrated by Dog-Woman, who matter-of-factly begins a description of herself by asking "how hideous am I?", it shimmers with hidden meaning and light. Jordan is a child of the water, having been found by Dog-Woman along the banks of the Thames, and Dog-Woman is a monstrous vulnerable creature whose feet are firmly planted on the soggy earth where she roams with her 50 dogs. The two of them are bound by a deep and unspoken devotion to one another but Jordan's quest for knowledge and love cannot be met by his mother's flat earth existence. He embarks on a journey that creates the philosophical bulk of the novel and in his travels, Winterson's talent for the fantastic, the incredible and the allegorical swing up and across the page like liquid silver.

Jordan stays in a house where no one allows their feet to touch the floor and thus they must live, eat and sleep on tightropes above the ground. He is introduced to 11 of the 12 Dancing Princesses who were married off in punishment after they were caught dancing all night long in a village not bound by gravity. The princesses live together in a castle having escaped their respective married lives of bondage and pain. Each tells her tale of woe, redemption and ultimate freedom. One of the stories is an obvious reconstitution of the Rapunzel fairytale in which the young princess and the witch are lovers who choose to live in a tower because they are so vilified by their town. They are happy until the younger lover is captured by a prince and the older woman is branded a witch and blinded by thorns. Other princesses suffer from having their same-sex passion persecuted by fanatics or living with men who hurt and degraded them.

In each case, the princesses take their fate in their hands and, whether through murder or guile, escape their marriages. Jordan finds a girl who is forced to live in a death tower for having been caught incestuously with her sister. He discovers a town where love and passion have been made illegal because it so often turned into a plague and obliterated its inhabitants. These fantastic stories can serve as allegories though Winterson does not create an easy geography for understanding. It is all chiaroscuro with momentary avenues of clarity.

In his journey, Jordan ruminates on time, memory, the flat earth, paintings and a mysterious woman named Fortunata whom he is seeking, whom he does not know and has not met, but who he believes holds the meaning of love. She, it turns out, is the 12th of the princesses and she has survived alone and without gravity for centuries.

Dog-Woman's life without Jordan is a battle against Puritans who have begun a campaign against the King and all sinners. She says guilelessly that she is a sinner herself and enters in sub rosa combat with the enemies of the King. This segment of the book is the most explicitly violent and reads almost as one long revenge fantasy against those who have oppressed others with their public piousness and poisoned a whole society with their obscene hypocrisy. When Dog-Woman gets the chance to exact revenge upon two preachers who had enforced their Puritanism on others while indulging in sin themselves, the description is chilling mostly for the grim, banal way in which Dog-Woman describes their dismemberment and decapitation.

Winterson is a supremely intelligent and well-educated writer. It cannot be by chance that she chose this particularly raging moment in English history for her story. Is it not true that we currently live in a world of equally monstrous hypocrisy and violence? Jordan's travels of love and Dog-Woman's battles with the forces of evil are resolved quite brilliantly at the end of the novel when Winterson zooms forward 350 years to 1990 and unites her themes of time, existence, memory and parallel universes into a gleaming and iridescent whole. It is as though she has entwined the novel with a golden thread and in its final pages there is a sense of such breathless intensity, that you are not sure if you are spinning in the web Winterson has created or if you are being released from it. Sexing the Cherry astonishes, perverts, annoys and distorts common truths. For this, Winterson is to be cherished even when cherishing is not entirely tender. ▼

Sexual Orientation and the Law
by The Editors of the Harvard Law Review. Harvard University Press.
$9.95 pb., $17.50 cl. 170 pp.

by Michael Schwarz

In May of 1989, the Harvard Law Review published a lengthy note on the legal status of "sexual orientation" and homosexuality. It has now been re-released by Harvard University Press in a convenient and inexpensive paperback edition.

The stated purpose of this book is to help raise anti-gay discrimination as a legitimate issue within mainstream legal discourse. Sexual Orientation and the Law is useful in providing a theoretical framework for legal analysis and in summarizing relevant legislation and case law.

The theoretical introduction provides a sound basis for analyzing and discussing sexual categories such as homosexuality and heterosexuality and the emergence of the gay rights movement. The authors describe four categories of ideas relating to homosexuality: 1) the notion that homosexual acts are sinful; 2) the notion that homosexual persons are mentally ill; 3) the notion that homosexual and heterosexual persons are different from one another, but that the difference between them is morally indifferent or insignificant; and 4) the notion that sexual categories are contingent on other social and cultural values, and so can only be understood in terms of their context, history and use.

The authors conclude that sin, with a couple of notable exceptions, is out of fashion. The sin theory of homosexuality has lost its legal force, the authors argue, because other forms of traditionally sinful behavior such as adultery are no longer criminalized. (The notable exception to this rule is the Supreme Court's refusal to extend the penumbra of privacy rights to homosexual sodomy. The majority in Bowers v. Hardwick, however, argued on the basis of sodomy's relation to "traditional morality," not sin.) The sickness theory of homosexuality is, by contrast, still very much with us, especially in legislative areas such as immigration, despite attacks from the medical and psychological community, as well as from gay rights advocates. This leaves the "neutral difference" and "social construction" positions, neither of which has received much attention in the courts, an oversight which the authors indicate should be amended.

The largest part of the book deals with six broad areas of law as they bear upon lesbian and gay rights: 1) the criminalization of same-sex sexual activity; 2) the rights of gay people in employment; 3) access to public schools; 4) spousal rights and responsibilities; 5) family law involving children; and 6) discrimination in insurance, immigration and public accommodation. Sexual Orientation and the Law does not deal with AIDS issues, except insofar as they relate directly to sexual orientation, although in several cases invidious arguments about the relationship between homosexuality and AIDS are rebuffed.

If what the law needs in order to "catch up" with society is a carefully crafted compendium of good legal arguments in favor of protecting the rights of lesbians and gays, Sexual Orientation and the Law provides a major service. It is the best and most up-to-date overview of legislation and case law pertaining to sexual orientation available today. At the very least, this book disseminates arguments in favor of protecting our rights that have hitherto been accessible only in law review articles and Horn Books.

The overall effect of the book is discouraging and even a bit depressing. Hardwick's influence in constitutional law seems to be growing, not lessening, particularly in light of judicial decisions handed down in the past 12 months. The most important of these cases—Watkins and Ben-Sbalom—extend the reach of the Hardwick decision to gay people generally, rather than being limited to people charged with specific criminal sexual acts. Hgb Tech Gays v. Defense Industrial Security Clearance Office, reversed by the Ninth Circuit after the book went to press, further reinforces the conclusions of Watkins and Ben-Sbalom that gay people and (constitutionally unprotected) sodomy are inextricably linked. "After Hardwick," another court agreed, "it cannot logically be asserted that discrimination against homosexuals is constitutionally infirm."

That so many separate courts can reach such clearly specious conclusions despite the compelling arguments presented in Sexual Orientation and the Law, makes one lose whatever faith one may have had in the power of legal reasoning. Hardwick, as Tom Stoddard has suggested, is "precedent by personal predilection." If this is so, Watkins, Ben-Sbalom and Hgb Tech Gays are nothing but irrational extensions of that personal (and discriminatory) predilection.

If our best hope of seeing our rights enshrined in law lies in the realm of legislation and the political process rather than in the courts, it is still good to know that the editors of the Harvard Law Review, at least, are on our side. Meanwhile, we should not hold our collective breath waiting for our rights to be announced from the mountaintop. Evidently, like every other minority, we need to win our rights through activism and struggle, and cannot rely on the federal courts to do very much to protect us. ▼

Let Me Up! Let Me Out!

Atame! (Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down!) Written and directed by Pedro Almodóvar. Produced by El Deseo, S.A. Miramax.

by Bruce C. Steele

Almodóvar, who's now too hip to use his first name in the credits of his movies, will no doubt find someone somewhere to defend Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down! He's been a critical darling ever since the whimsically oddball What Have I Done to Deserve This? and was practically canonized for Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown. But his reputation rests on his films starring the magnetic Carmen Maura, and I now wonder if critics haven't been responding more to her presence than to the irregular talents of her director. Maura isn't in Tie Me Up! She probably read the script and refused to participate.

The movie is a "high concept" comedy—it's like something Touchstone Pictures would cast Bette Midler in along with the hunk-of-the-moment. Ricky (Antonio Banderas) is a sociopath just released from the asylum. He believes that Marina (Victoria Abril), an ex-porn queen and ex-junkie, will fall in love with him, marry him and bear his children if she just gets to know him a little better. So he kidnaps her. He roughs her up and ties her down but otherwise pretends to be a gentleman. She despises him, naturally, and decides in desperation to revive her heroin habit just to cope with captivity. Yet when Ricky gets beaten up trying to buy the dope, Marina dresses his wounds and hops into bed with him. After she's rescued—more or less by accident—Marina tracks Ricky down so she can fulfill his fatuous dreams of marriage and family.

If the film has a subtext that's supposed to excuse the gross sexism, sadism and stupidity inherent in its storyline and characters, I certainly couldn't find it. The movie's too facile and offensive to support any kind of thematic musings about the unpredictability of passion. Ricky is empty, psychotic and not remotely appealing (except possibly to his own kind), and Marina's actions are incomprehensible. This is not a movie about a hostage who develops a defensive identification with her captor. In one scene Marina breaks her bonds and tears up the apartment in an effort to escape; in the next, she's complementing Ricky's sexual technique. Her conversion occurs without a wisp of motivation.

ALL IN A DAY'S WORK

What was Almodóvar thinking? Is he testing the loyalty of his fans? The endurance of his critical lapdogs? Might he claim a "cultural gap"—that we soft-hearted Americans simply can't understand the Mediterranean libido and sense of humor? Is the whole movie some sort of failed joke, a kind of hetero version of The Everlasting Secret Family?

It doesn't matter. Even warped rationalizations to excuse the sexism can't save the movie, because it fails miserably even to engage, much less amuse. Almodóvar focuses so intently on the central "love story"—complete with a lush, inviting score by Ennio Morricone—that the director's trademark eccentricity and offbeat twists on popular culture are largely absent. The attempts at humor are infrequent, lame, and often as appalling as the plotline. The cast, even the Almodóvar regulars, seems uninspired—perhaps they're embarrassed to be involved.

Almodóvar is reputedly a gay filmmaker, but the only sexual attitude consistent to his films is the half-baked notion that desire is always capricious, usually painful and often violent. His few gay characters are generally peripheral objects of pathos or ridicule, and both What Have I Done? and Matador are passingly homophobic, presenting gay desire as less than desirable. The apparently gay man who appears briefly in Tie Me Up! exists only to provide the oddly decorated apartment in which Ricky imprisons Marina. Some of Almodóvar's films with Carmen Maura at least present straight women with a degree of sensitivity, but Tie Me Up! is either a weird affirmation of heterosexual stereotypes or a disastrously failed satire. At this rate, I'd be relieved to hear that Almodóvar isn't gay after all. ▼

The database is scheduled to be operational September 1, 1990. Already, requests for information and ideas for projects are arriving. Run on a shoestring, the Witness Project received a $1,500 grant from Creative Time. All other funds, including the cost of a secondhand computer, come from the pockets of Watson and Saltz.

Watson said, "I see no difference between being an AIDS activist, a health activist and my involvement with the cultural community. This is what I do. Art is politics. That's the bottom line." ▼ to a bath or to a cruising place, meets somebody and wants to fuck him, penetrating him without a condom would be criminal. But if a guy wants to be fucked 18 times a day without a condom, that's his problem. You have to try to act in a safe way, but if some people don't, then you just have to protect yourself and let these people live their lives and decide what's good or not for them."

S3 is well aware that the epidemic has been used by diverse groups of people to say that, after all, gays got what they deserved. But he also feels that now the issue has shifted.

"Gays know about AIDS, they know how to handle it, but that's not the case with straight people, who still fuck without condoms. They still think AIDS is a disease for gays and drug addicts only."

3; GRUMH... isn't the only band from this musical genre that uses strong gay imagery. Nitzer Ebb used to cultivate an obsession for the body and a narcissism verging on the homoerotic, although they have toned down this aspect of their music, especially on their latest album, Showtime. Borghesia, another band from Yugoslavia, has gay members (S3;

"The drummer's boyfriend is sooo cute"), and several of their songs have an explicit gay content, often with strong S/M overtones.

In Europe, many young nationalists enjoy the harshness and bleak visions of pain and decay offered by industrial bands. Many techno bands seem to say that beauty and pleasure aren't easy to grasp, that you have to suffer to obtain them. But for every band like Test Department, the articulate British socialist band, how many groups are dubious advocates of gratuitous violence? Most of the bands which young extremists are attracted to have an ambiguous stand. In this case, S3 doesn't believe in subtlety. "The bands are responsible. Anyone who speaks in the media, whose opinions and words are spread through the media, has a responsibility over what they say. That's why I think many bands don't do the right thing, they let things happen. It's not enough to say 'I'm against fascism' in interviews. You have to be clear on records, on stage, in videos. At all Laibach gigs, you get these nazis in the front rows, and when they get worked up, they could do anything in the streets the next day. I personally don't think Laibach members are fascists, but they should find a way to say it!"

S3 is smart enough to get all the essential connections; he fights against all kinds of oppression, and that's why he'll "always be involved in gay liberation, as in any kind of liberation of minorities." S3 uses morbid imagery only to make a point, rather than offending middle class values. "On the Underground 12-inch, there were pictures of deformed kids. That was a very serious message. My cousin lost two babies in a row, because they were ill. I want to tell people, first it's not easy to make a baby, so you should be happy when your baby is in good health. Second, all the people who think 'I'm so ugly, I want to die' have to look in the mirror and think 'I'm alive, and I'm in good health.' Even if they're a bit handicapped, they're alive. When, playing in a small city in the North of France, they commented on Le Pen [head of France's right-wing National Front], only to find the four tires of their van slashed by a gang of skinheads.

This group also differs from other industrial bands because, despite their severe expressions on pictures, they believe a sense of humor is essential. S3 is a feisty guy who loves making puns; one of their EPs was titled Too Many Cocks Spoil The Breath ("it's just true!"). As he simply puts it, "my main interests in life are love, friends, sex, music, comics and movies." Keeping an eye open for fascists doesn't mean the band isn't enjoying itself.

"It would be so sad not to be able to smile on stage" says S3, "not to talk to people, not to enjoy myself. I'm not interested in showing people that I'm a robot." Indeed, 3; GRUMH...s live show is loud, intense, usually fast, but also fun and includes terrific aerobics music. The band fits more into the rock tradition of partying and interacting with the public than into the usual arrogant distance most techno bands adopt. Commenting on the band's new singer, S3 emphatically declared that he "is much better than the old one," before cracking up and adding, "he pukes all the time." Asked about Axl Rose's homophobic comments, he generously declared loving Paradise City, before saying wryly that he is "not interested in what they have to say. They talk like children, and 14-year-olds are not supposed to have ideas."

S3's final words before conquering New York: "Don't forget to write that all the fat and hairy men who read the article can come and cruise me after the show." Dykes, don't feel excluded, you can cruise me. I'm easy to find: look for the four-eyed nerd in a blue parka. ▼

3; GRUMH... will be playing at Woody's in NYC on May 4, with Pankow, an excellent Italian band with a singer who could confirm all of Cardinal O'Connor's theories on demonic possession.

Editor's notes:

The NYC club scene is volatile. Call first to confirm parties. Admissions range from $5 to $15. Invites offer discounts. A (*) denotes a club that attracts TVs. Some clubs, such as Copacabana, Roxy, Quickl and Mars (especially on mixed straight/gay nights) have obnoxious, selective door policies; often to create a mood, with everyone getting in after a wait. Arrive before midnight. Dress erotic, exotic or rich. Look fun.

Special parties are listed in the GOING OUT calendar. Send additions, corrections and dish to Rick X, Box 790, NYC

Safer Sex Guidelines

- 1. USE A CONDOM WHEN FUCKING. Avoid oil-based lubricants such as baby oil, Vaseline, Crisco etc., as they can cause condoms to break. Instead use water-based lubes like KY. The older a condom, the less reliable, so find condoms whose manufacturers' dates are less than three months old.
- 2. USE A CONDOM DURING ORAL SEX. If you don't, avoid placing the head of your partner's cock in your mouth. HIV-infected cum or precum can enter your bloodstream through cuts, tears or ulcers in your mouth.
- 3. USE DENTAL DAMS DURING ORAL-VAGINAL SEX. HIV is present in some amounts in vaginal secretions, urine, menstrual blood, and infection-related vaginal discharge.
- 4. NEVER SHARE WORKS. This includes needles, syringes, droppers, spoons, cottons or cookers. If you must reuse works, clean them after each use with bleach, or in an emergency with rubbing alcohol or vodka, by drawing the solution into the needle three times and then drawing clean water into the needle three times.
- 5. AVOID FISTING, RIMMING, OR SHARING UNCLEANNED SEX TOYS.
- 6. AVOID POPPERS.
- 7. AVOID EXCESSIVE ALCOHOL OR DRUG USE. Many people are unable to maintain safer sex practices after getting high.
- 8. DON'T HESITATE TO: Fuck with a condom, have oral sex with a condom. Play with, but don't share, clean sex toys, vibrators and dildoes. Enjoy massage, hugging, masturbation (alone, with a partner or in a group), and role-playing.

Remember, sex is good, and gay sex is great. Don't avoid sex, just avoid the virus. Learn to eroticize safer sex and you can protect others, remain safe and have fun.

DO YOU ENJOY LAUGHING?

Looking for a serious monogamous relationship with a guy with a sense of humor. I'm a yng handsome, 50, 5'9", 145# GWM, healthy, active, go to the gym 4x wkly.
