Once upon a time, when the world was young, there were DRAGONS!

Dragons were usually huge, with great wings, huge teeth, spiky tails and could breathe fire!

Naturally, everyone was scared of dragons and hid in caves or underground homes whenever a dragon should come around.

Because dragons would eat anything – horses, cows, sheep and even people!

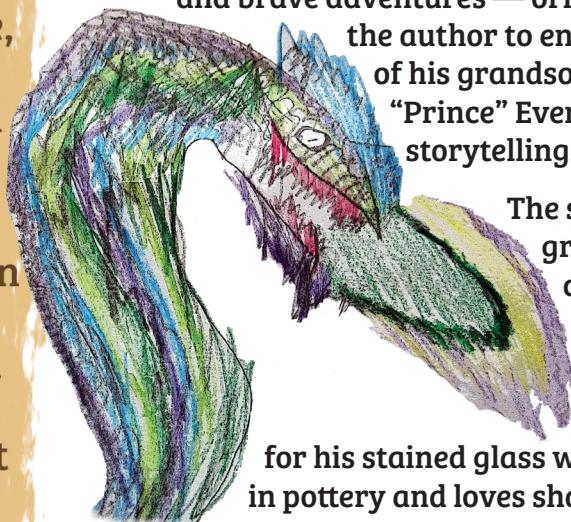

In a secluded valley, nestled between some very tall mountains, there lived a small kingdom, ruled by a very wonderful King, named Owen. King Owen was well loved by his people and had a brother, who was also well loved, named Prince Everett.

Find out what happens next in this world of wondrous dragons and brave princes.

We hope you enjoy this excerpt from the story about Prince Everett and the Scaredy Dragon, one of the magical tales in the new children’s book “Pappo’s Bedtime Stories” by Louisville author Randall “Pappo” Snook.

The book is a collection of stories about dragons, princes and brave adventures — originally invented by the author to entice the imagination of his grandsons, “Prince” Owen and “Prince” Everett, during bedtime storytelling.

The stories inspired his grandson Everett to create the whimsical illustrations that bring the characters to life.

“Pappo” Snook, known for his stained glass window art, now works in pottery and loves sharing this art form with his grandsons. One piece, titled “The Tower,” is featured in the book.
