BEHOLD! A BAD BITCH WITH PRAXIS

Hiiii! My name is Tajh and I am a mother of two, lifelong creative and community organizer. For 7 years I served as a school board member in New York City's gentrification capital- Williamsburg Brooklyn which is also where I grew up! (Yes. Niggas live there!)

While my advocacy for Black Lives, disability, gender, economic, language, immigrant & racial justice was all unpaid and unappreciated, it was ultimately my organizing alongside K-12, CUNY & NYC college students for a Free Palestine that got me doxxed and illegally removed from the board in June 2024.

I had always intended to use this name to create space for Black mothers in education spaces in order to promote autonomy and ownership of Black children's education by Black people, and Black women in particular who statistically teach EVERYONE'S children well and carry entire communities, both inside and outside of school, on their backs with zero fanfare. I never got to use this name the way I wanted but I did live the values it represents to the fullest. Now that I am no longer beholden to the stranglehold of bureaucratic bullshit tied to the racist ass department of education, I can truly step into the name.

I hope this heals you like it heals me so you can live a life free of respectability.

AUTHENTICITY AS A PERSONAL POLITIC

Showing up as yourself as a Black woman is always political. I couldn't help but notice that the more feminine I dressed and the higher pitched my voice, the better I was received. Despite my politics, or yours, the toxicity of any environment will begin to shape you in its image. In the end, even the most tame version of me was too radical for those hoers! But I am still working toward learning myself again. Wearing clothes because I like them and not as an act of self preservation or performance. I have always loved yellow tho

~~OVER~~ AND STYLE

Misogynoir teaches Black women they can either be a 'snack' or 'soul food.' Every bad bitch I've ever met was both. Do with that information what you will!
