

Volunteers pitch in to clean up historic school

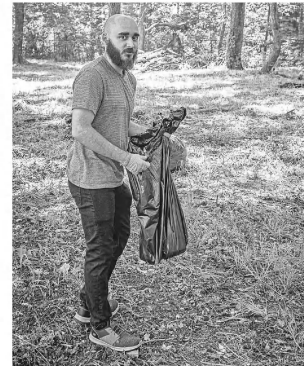

As part of the Chesapeake Bay Foundation's "Clean The Bay Day" the Cape Charles Rosenwald Restoration Initiative had a crew working to clean up at the abandoned Rosenwald School in Cape Charles. The volunteer crew picked up trash, cleared brush and did maintenance work around the school. The group has plans to transform the building into a multi-use community space. PHOTOS BY PHILIP SPOHN/SPECIAL TO SALISBURY DAILY TIMES

Congresswoman Elaine Luria showed up at the Rosenwald School site to help with the clean-up that was held to coincide with the Chesapeake Bay Foundation's Clean the Bay Day on June 5.

Young volunteers help with trash removal at the Rosenwald School cleanup in Cape Charles.

A volunteer on broken glass duty during the cleanup.

A volunteer orders from Gordo's Taco Truck which showed to offer lunch to the group that help clean up at Rosenwald School in Cape Charles.

A board member of the Rosenwald School restoration initiative and a former student mans a table with information on the effort at the cleanup.

The Commonwealth Historical Marker highlights the role the old Rosenwald School played in the area's history.

A volunteer contemplates the heavy work ahead of them during the Rosenwald School cleanup.