Ravi was a curious boy who loved spending time with his grandfather. Every evening, he would sit beside him under the old banyan tree near their house. His grandfather often told him stories about his childhood, when life was simple and people depended more on nature than machines.

One day, Ravi noticed that many birds had stopped coming to the tree. When he asked his grandfather about it, he was told that people had cut down many trees in the area to build houses and roads. As a result, birds lost their homes and food. Ravi felt sad and decided to do something.

The next day, he planted two saplings near his house and promised to take care of them. He also encouraged his friends to plant trees. Slowly, the area began to look greener, and birds started returning. Ravi understood that small actions can bring big changes.
