SECTION – A (READING)

[5]

1. Read the passage and answer the questions that follow:

The elephant, with its long trunk and sharp tusks, is a fascinating animal. It is the largest land animal in the world, and is very intelligent and sensitive. Elephants are vegetarian and eat grass, wild fruit, leaves and bamboo. Elephants are found mainly in India and parts of Africa. Indian and African elephants are quite different. The African elephant is larger and has bigger ears and tusks. The two are often considered to be different species. An African elephant has extra protruding muscles at the tip of its trunk. They help it to grab things and are known as the elephant's fingers. An Indian elephant has only one finger and it holds things by scooping them with the trunk. The elephant's trunk is very useful and unique. The trunk has several thousand muscles while our entire human body has only 639 muscles!

The elephant can use its trunk to pluck a tender flower or to haul a heavy log. It is used to smell, bathe, eat, drink and even to threaten enemies. In fact, it is almost impossible for an elephant to survive if its trunk is damaged. Of course, they also use their tusks for fighting and digging. However, the trunk has many more uses.
