Cheese is one of the most popular ingredients used the world over. There are 18 distinct types of cheese, depending upon the kind of milk and the way the milk is processed. The simplest type of cheese is paneer, or cottage cheese. Milk is heated and curdled by adding lemon juice or vinegar. Then the excess whey or liquid is drained out and the cheese is pressed into blocks that are eaten fresh or fried and added to curries.

Some types of cheese are made by using animal rennet to curdle the milk. Others contain vegetable rennet, extracted from a species of thistle. Rennet is also manufactured chemically in the laboratory. There is even kind of fungus that is fermented to mimic rennet. Some cheeses are ripened by deliberately injecting special moulds and bacteria. The bacteria creates holes or rinds on the surface of the cheese. Moulds ripen the cheese internally and form blue veins to produce a distinctive flavour. Besides cow and buffalo milk, cheese can be made from the milk of sheep, goats, camels, mares, jennies, yaks and even reindeer.

About 5.5 liters of whole milk are required to make half a kilo of cheese. So cheese contains the nutrients found in milk in a concentrated form. Cheese is a good source of protein, vitamins A, B 12, D and minerals like calcium, phosphorus and zinc.
