During her next at bat, the injured player may only run to first base, regardless of how far the ball has been hit, and wait until play has stopped before calling time out to have the pinch runner replace her.

The second line will be drawn parallel to the first, with a distance of 20 feet between the two lines. It will extend from the third base line into foul territory. This second line is the commitment line. Any runner that crosses the commitment line is forced to run home. Runners must cross the safe line to score. Any runner that touches home plate is out. The runner may slide across the safety line as long as she does not touch home plate.
