

Tears

Written by Shameela

Words were how I learned of your arrival, pen to paper that flew through the air.

Almost 30 years later words in plain black and white telling that your no longer there.

Words spoken over many years we learned of each other from a far.

It was clear from the start you were more than special, and destined to be a star.

Welcome words waving excitedly around,
After touch down, down under, we were all homeward bound.
At last a meeting, face to face.
Years of conversations, now finally a family embrace.

We similarly shared movements, colour and stature,
This was a successful case of nature over nurture.
Separated by miles and brought up apart
The time spent with you will be kept safe in my heart.

Time passes us by, words unspoken, unheard, unread
We are left with wondering what last words needed to be said.

But today we celebrate you, and try and over come this sadness that we are feeling.
We hope it's true that this "time" they say will be healing.

Today we accept your forever young, never to grow old,
And together we laugh, share memories, your stories are told.

You were too beautiful for earth if only you knew,
How dearly your thought of, and how much we miss you.

Did this chapter resonate with you?

Please send us your feedback and thoughts to connect@chapter29.com
Share this story with someone you know who may benefit from hearing it.