Local Home Memorialized as Historical Site

The Historic Preservation Commission had the pleasure of memorializing 310 West Carroll Street as a Macomb historical site. Current owners Jerry and Carrie Depoy are pictured alongside Mayor Inman, Alan Nemec, and Dennis Danowski.

Jo Branson Named Assistant Dean Spoon River College

Jo Branson, who joined Spoon River College as the director of the financial aid office 17 years ago, has taken the position of assistant dean in the student services office, saying she was ready for a new challenge.

"I decided to look into this new position because I wanted to continue to serve Spoon River College and the students in a role where I can be more creative, while still being close at hand to help mentor the financial aid office through the transition," said Branson. "I look forward to working more closely with our advising staff."

The position was created recently to provide extra support to the dean of student services in the areas of recruitment, retention, and other student support activities.

"Jo brings invaluable expertise and leadership to this role," said Missy Wilkinson, dean of student services. "She will collaborate with college employees to develop and implement new student recruitment and retention initiatives, including identifying barriers to student success and implementing initiatives to address those challenges."

Branson resides in rural Ipava with her husband Steve and their daughter Audry, who will be attending Southern College of Optometry in Memphis, TN this fall. When not working, Branson enjoys spending time outside, crafting, and taking care of her chickens.

WIU Anthropology Professor Featured on The Conversation

MACOMB, IL -- "Each time one of the medicine men dies, it's as if a library has burned down," said Ethnobotanist Scholar Mark Plotkin.

Western Illinois University Department of Anthropology Professor Heather McIlvaine-Newsad recently published an article with The Conversation; a nonprofit, independent news organization dedicated to unlocking the knowledge of experts for public good. The article, "From Magic Mushrooms to Big Pharma - a college course explores nature's medicine cabinet and different ways of healing," discusses the conversation taught through her WIU course "From Magic Mushrooms to Big Pharma."

"The current generation of young people are open about mental health issues, and many people are looking for new ways to deal with anxiety, grief, PTSD and depression," said McIlvaine-Newsad. "Students discuss their health concerns and learn about alternatives to what they may be accustomed to."

The course is part of the Cannabis and Culture minor at WIU. It explores how people and cultures across the world use nature-based medicines to heal themselves from the diseases that surround us. The course covers everything from traditional healing methods to western approaches that are rooted in nature.

Taken by Western Illinois University Department of Anthropology Professor Heather McIlvaine-Newsad. This photo was taken in northern Germany outside of Wienhausen in a forest preserve in 2022.

McIlvaine-Newsad is fascinated at the many ways society can heal and stay healthy.

"Over the course of the semester, students begin to recognize that there is no one right way of healing," said McIlvaine-Newsad. "More importantly, there is no one right way of being human. It is my hope that students leave seeing that everything is connected, integrally linked to humanity's relationship to nature."

STRANGE BUT TRUE

By Lucie Winborne

* Scientists believe Earth's core, made up primarily of iron and nickel, may be even hotter than the surface of the sun, with temperatures reaching up to 9,932 degrees F.

* Smoking a cigarette causes damage not in years, but minutes.

* Platypuses may be cute, but are also so odd-looking that when scientists first discovered them, they thought the animal was a hoax.

* People are 30 times more likely to laugh at something if they're with someone else.

* In the early 20th century, radium was commonly mixed with water, sold as an over-the-counter "energy" drink under the brand name Radithor, and marketed with the slogan "A Cure for the Living Dead," until the federal government stopped its production in 1932.

* Ancient Roman soldiers sometimes wore breastplates encrusted with diamonds in the belief that the gems offered them extra protection.
