

CBD Dosing Suggestions for Pets

CBD/Full-spectrum hemp oil is well tolerated in high doses in healthy mammals, but the rule of thumb is “start low and work your way up”.

As always, talking to your pet's veterinarian is recommended.

The suggested dosage starts with 1-2 mg once to twice a day. Dosages depend upon many things, including health of animal, weight, age, breed, medical issue, etc.

Many veterinarians who have experience with CBD recommend this weight based dosage:

0.5– 1.0 mg/kg once to twice daily.

You can find out your pet's weight in kg by either asking your pet's vet, or Googling the conversion.

For active seizures, you can double the daily dose and squirt with a syringe into the side of your animal's mouth/cheek. However do not squirt any more than one half a syringe ($\frac{1}{2}$ cc) at a time to avoid choking. If a larger dose is needed, you can alternate cheeks. If that dosage doesn't work within 1 minute, you can repeat the dosage. Some people will even double the second dose, but we recommend trying the lowest dosage first. As always, talk to your pet's vet. Surprisingly, many vets are starting to recommend CBD oils for their furry patients, and may have experience with weight appropriate dosage for many of your pet's issues – including anxiety, pain, seizures, aggression, etc.

If you received a syringe for more accurate dosing: There are a couple of things to know/keep in mind.

First, 1 cc = 1 ml. You can interchange these units as needed. (sometimes bottles are marked in “cc”, sometimes in “ml” or “mL”. They are all equal.

The syringe you received with your oil or powder is = 1 cc (ml). It is marked from “0 – 1.0” for accurate dosing, and works very well with the 300 mg CBD/30 cc oil. Each cc – or full syringe, is = 10 mg. So each number marked on the syringe is = 1 mg. In other words, a full syringe = 10 mg of CBD. One half a syringe is marked at the '5' is worth 5 mg of CBD, etc.

Any questions or concerns? Text, call or email us! We'd love to hear from you.

Thank you for your patronage; it is greatly appreciated!

Best of health to you!

Beth & Rich Vezzosi

REV Health Products, LLC

www.REVhealthproducts.com

beth@revhealthproducts.com

602-369-7658