An Interview with German Fine Art Photographer Thomas Demand

Thomas Demand is a German photographer and sculpturist who is internationally known for his large scale sculptures. The artist, who is professor of art at the University of Hamburg, has earned considerable international attention for his unique sculptural works recently featured in the New Art Examiner and Art in America. With a background in architecture, Demand has been recognized as one of the leading figures in photographic art.

Silence? If you do use or listen to music who are some of your favorite artists?

I really have no very new advice for the young artist. Just don’t show too early. The first show is still...
