A New Generation of Musicians

By Artoxander Afroxander

A new crop of artists from the Southland have taken on the mantle of Chicano soul and oldies.

Read More

By Drew Tewksbury

A new crop of artists from the Southland have taken on the mantle of Chicano soul and oldies. A new generation of musicians is on the rise, embodying the rich cultural heritage of the region.

Throughout your career you've been through many art movements, is there one you've been more comfortable with?

It's interesting that you describe it as a torment, could you explain that to me?

Let's put it this way, in a certain sense you're kind of doing therapy at the same time, isn't it?

What kind of creative processes are different between writing a song or making a painting?

What kind of creative processes are different between writing a song or making a painting?

A new crop of artists from the Southland have taken on the mantle of Chicano soul and oldies. A new generation of musicians is on the rise, embodying the rich cultural heritage of the region.

Throughout your career you've been through many art movements, is there one you've been more comfortable with?

It's interesting that you describe it as a torment, could you explain that to me?

Let's put it this way, in a certain sense you're kind of doing therapy at the same time, isn't it?

What kind of creative processes are different between writing a song or making a painting?

What kind of creative processes are different between writing a song or making a painting?

A new generation of musicians is on the rise, embodying the rich cultural heritage of the region.

Throughout your career you've been through many art movements, is there one you've been more comfortable with?

It's interesting that you describe it as a torment, could you explain that to me?

Let's put it this way, in a certain sense you're kind of doing therapy at the same time, isn't it?

What kind of creative processes are different between writing a song or making a painting?