General Client Rights

*You are entitled to receive information about the methods of the techniques used, the duration of your therapy, if known, and the fee structure. You can obtain a second opinion from another therapist or terminate therapy at any time. You are of course entitled to any information which helps you understand the process of intervention, be it clinical or educational.

*In a professional relationship, sexual intimacy is never appropriate, and should be reported to the board that licenses this practitioner, as indicated below.

*Generally speaking, the information provided by and to the client during therapy sessions is legally confidential and cannot be released without the client’s consent. There are exceptions to this confidentiality, some of which are listed in section 12-43-218 of the Colorado Revised Statutes, and the HIPAA Notice of Privacy Rights you were provided. If a legal exception arises during therapy, if feasible, you will be informed accordingly. For example, mental health professionals are required to report child and elder abuse to authorities.

Additionally, if you are considered a danger to self or others, the proper authorities may be contacted to ensure the safety of you and others. And, if your involvement is court-ordered, with ongoing and legal proceedings, information will likely be required by the Court and/or personnel associated with the Court.
