

We are building a Story Teller's Cadre because stories are how humans make meaning.

Long before institutions, before technologies, before systems, stories were how knowledge, values, and wisdom were carried forward.

This cadre is not about performance for its own sake.

It is about cultivating people who can hold attention, speak truth, and shape experience through narrative.

We are looking for storytellers who understand that a story is not just something you tell — it is something you host.

It requires presence.

It requires responsibility.

And it requires an awareness of the audience and the moment in which the story is being shared.

Our vision is to develop a group of storytellers who can be invited into many kinds of spaces — community, educational, ceremonial, and professional — and offer stories that are grounded, human, and meaningful.

The audition process has two levels.

The first is about discovering raw storytelling potential — voice, truth, and narrative instinct.

The second is about readiness — the ability to adapt, take direction, and represent this cadre with integrity.

Not everyone who auditions will be selected, and not everyone selected will be immediately bookable.

This is intentional.

We are building something durable, and we believe in clarity, care, and craft.

If you are here, you are already part of the conversation.

Our role today is simply to listen.
