I. INTRODUCTION

When crafting a comprehensive estate plan for clients, planning for and coordinating assets that pass outside of probate is an imperative part of the process.¹ Most clients' estates include non-probate assets; in fact, the

CONF. 1, 1 (2014), https://utcle.org/ecourses/OC5711/get-asset-file/asset_id/33384 [<https://perma.cc/RCS7-KAEB>] (Portions of this article have been adapted proportion of these non-probate assets in relation to the overall value of the client's estate is quite significant.² It is not uncommon for life insurance and retirement plans alone to make up the majority of the value of a client's gross estate.³ Accordingly, attorneys must advise clients to incorporate these assets into the estate plan, and not just as an afterthought.⁴

Obviously, attorneys must ascertain each client's personal goals concerning the overall estate plan in order to determine the ultimate disposition of the client's non-probate assets.⁵ The attorney must then identify and analyze each non-probate asset and educate the client regarding how each asset should be distributed at the client's death.⁶ The paperwork involved in directing the disposition of non-probate assets can sometimes be daunting.⁷ The forms required are as varied as the financial institutions, life insurance companies, plan administrators, and plan custodians involved.⁸

This Article is not intended to address every issue associated with the coordination of non-probate assets with the rest of the estate plan.⁹ In particular, the nuances of the income tax and distribution considerations involved in the disposition of retirement plans are not addressed.¹⁰ Rather, the goals of this Article are to highlight issues that may influence the suggested disposition of non-probate assets, to assist in the identification of non-probate assets that may not be easily recognizable, and to provide guidance about how to manage some of the paperwork involved.¹¹

II. CONSIDERATIONS INFLUENCING THE BEST DISPOSITION OF NON-PROBATE ASSETS

The attorney must take the time to listen to the goals and concerns of each client and use the information gathered during these discussions to shape the plan for disposition of non-probate assets in a way that accomplishes the client's objectives and coordinates with the overall estate plan.¹² Although the general considerations of clients are usually similar, each client's personality and situation is unique, and clients will inevitably place different emphasis on each of the considerations.¹³ In addition to the critical goal of providing for a particular person or class of persons, clients' goals may include tax savings, creditor protection, and probate avoidance.¹⁴ It is important to evaluate each of these goals when advising a client.¹⁵

Most clients can identify exactly who they would like to receive their property at their death.¹⁶ While the client's ultimate goal may sound simple (e.g., "I want to take care of my spouse for her lifetime, and then I want to provide for my kids"), consideration must be given to a host of factors in order to determine how that simple-sounding objective can best be accomplished.¹⁷

A. Minor Children

If minor children are involved in the estate plan, it is essential to ensure that property will not pass to those children outright.¹⁸ In Texas, children under the age of eighteen are minors and deemed to be under a legal incapacity.¹⁹ Accordingly, if a minor child inherits property outright, a court will have to prescribe a management vehicle for the property, which may range from appointing a guardian of the child's estate to ordering that the funds be held in the court's registry, to creating a management trust for the property.²⁰ To avoid a costly and time-consuming legal proceeding to determine how to collect and hold funds for a minor, the client may elect to employ trust planning in the client's will.²¹ Non-probate assets, therefore, should be structured to avoid passing to minor children outright.²²

B. Beneficiaries with Special Needs

If the client wishes to benefit a person who may be accepting or eligible to accept governmental benefits, consideration needs to be given to whether the assistance received by the beneficiary affects qualification.²³ If so, receipt of inherited assets by the beneficiary—whether outright or in trust—may disqualify the beneficiary from acceptance of those benefits.²⁴ Careful consideration and planning is required if a client knows or anticipates that one of the client's intended beneficiaries may qualify for governmental benefits.²⁵ A supplemental needs trust (sometimes called a special needs trust) may need to be created to hold funds for a beneficiary receiving governmental assistance so that the beneficiary may continue to qualify for the assistance.²⁶ If such a trust is necessary, leaving non-probate assets outright to the beneficiary may thwart the purposes of the trust and may disqualify the beneficiary from receipt of governmental assistance.²⁷

C. Providing for Surviving Spouse and Children in Succession

If a client's goal is to provide for the client's spouse for the surviving spouse's lifetime and then provide for the client's children, leaving assets outright to a spouse may not accomplish these objectives.²⁸ If a spouse receives property outright, whether through a bequest in the client's will or the designation of the spouse as beneficiary of a non-probate asset, there is no guarantee that at the surviving spouse's later death the surviving spouse will leave that asset to the first spouse's children.²⁹ This tends to be a more pressing concern when working with married couples who have children from prior relationships.³⁰ Many couples employ trust planning to achieve ultimate disposition to a second generation at the death of the second spouse.³¹ The attorney should evaluate non-probate assets to determine whether they should pass to the trustee of such a trust instead of outright to the surviving spouse.³²

D. Payment of Debts, Expenses, and Taxes

Some clients have earmarked certain assets for particular beneficiaries (e.g., a life insurance policy for Child A and the family business for Child B).³³ Likewise, some clients, intending to provide equally for two parties, leave all of the probate estate to one beneficiary and leave a non-probate asset of equivalent value to another beneficiary.³⁴ In these types of situations, the client must be made aware of disparities that may arise between the beneficiaries as a result of the necessary payment of debts, expenses, and taxes.³⁵

For example, if a client has a probate estate of approximately $3 million which he leaves to Child A, and a life insurance policy with a death benefit of equivalent value of which Child B is the named beneficiary, Child B could end up being much better off.³⁶ This is because the estate's creditors will first look to the probate assets for satisfaction of their debts.³⁷ Additionally, although a different result through drafting is possible, it is common for a will's apportionment clause to direct that all administration expenses and taxes be paid from the client's residuary estate.³⁸ In that case, Child A's portion may be greatly depleted while Child B's portion would be left untouched.³⁹ Even if Child B would like to do the right thing and pay for half of any debts, expenses, and administration expenses, there may be gift tax consequences to Child B.⁴⁰

Accordingly, if a client expresses a desire to provide for beneficiaries in such a manner, the attorney should discuss these issues with the client and should scrutinize and modify the apportionment clauses in the client's will or revocable trust as necessary to accomplish the client's objectives.⁴¹

E. Tax Savings

I have yet to encounter a client whose goals do not include saving tax.⁴² The considerations involved in tax savings, whether about estate tax or income tax, are complicated.⁴³ Nonetheless, the attorney should make the client aware of tax issues involved in the disposition of non-probate assets.⁴⁴

1. Estate Tax

If traditional marital tax planning is employed in the client's will or revocable trust, it may be important for non-probate assets to be available to fund the tax-planned trusts created in the will.⁴⁵ Otherwise, these trusts can end up being unfunded or underfunded.⁴⁶ The relatively new availability of "portability" of a deceased spouse's unused federal estate tax exemption amount may negate or minimize the underfunding problem in some circumstances.⁴⁷ However, to take advantage of portability, a federal estate tax return must be filed for the deceased spouse within nine months of the deceased spouse's date of death (or within fifteen months with a timely filed extension request).⁴⁸ For married clients who may have estate tax exposure, it is essential to discuss the various methods of estate tax planning and coordinate non-probate assets accordingly.⁴⁹

2. Income Tax

Attorneys should make clients aware of the income tax implications of naming beneficiaries on certain non-probate assets.⁵⁰ If the non-probate asset involved is a "qualified" retirement plan (IRA, 401(k), pension, thrift, profit-sharing, KEOGH, etc.) or tax-deferred annuity, the best income tax result (i.e., longest deferral period) is generally achieved only if the beneficiary meets the requirements to be treated as a "designated beneficiary" under the Internal Revenue Code and Treasury Regulations.⁵¹

If a client has charitable inclinations, naming a charity as a beneficiary of such a qualified retirement plan may be the most tax-efficient way to accomplish charitable goals.⁵² Although a charity cannot be a “designated beneficiary” when benefits are distributed to a charity, the charity will receive the benefits free of income tax, as opposed to individuals or trusts who would have to pay income tax on the distributions received from such retirement plans.⁵³

While a complete discussion of the nuances involved in such a determination is outside of the scope of this Article, the attorney must consider the income tax implications when planning for these qualified non-probate assets.⁵⁴

F. Creditor Protection

If a client has concerns about a beneficiary’s creditors or their own creditors, the attorney should carefully consider the rules relating to creditor exposure when directing the disposition of non-probate assets.⁵⁵

1. Creditors of the Beneficiary

A client may have specific reasons for seeking creditor protection for a beneficiary.⁵⁶ For example, the client’s spouse may work in a high-risk profession (e.g., the medical field), or a client’s child may be bad at managing money.⁵⁷ However, many clients just like the idea that their beneficiaries’ inheritance may be protected from general creditors and potential claims in a divorce.⁵⁸ To this end, a client may desire that any inheritance (including non-probate assets not otherwise protected from creditors as discussed below) pass to the trustee of a testamentary spendthrift trust for the benefit of the beneficiary rather than to the beneficiary outright.⁵⁹

2. Creditors of the Decedent

Additionally, the client may be concerned about the client's own creditors.⁶⁰ At the client's death, the client's personal creditors will become creditors of their estate.⁶¹ Most assets that are administered as part of the estate will be exposed to claims of creditors of the estate.⁶² Accordingly, the knee-jerk reaction may be to structure assets so that they are non-probate assets and avoid naming the "estate" as the beneficiary of non-probate assets that require a beneficiary designation.⁶³ However, those actions may not be necessary or may not have the desired effect of creditor protection.⁶⁴

3. Creditor Exposure and Protection for Some Non-Probate Assets

The discussion below highlights a few notable creditor issues for select non-probate assets.⁶⁵

a. Life Insurance and Annuities

Estate planners used to caution against naming the client's "estate" as a beneficiary on a life insurance or annuity contract.⁶⁶ The Texas Insurance Code provides that benefits under life insurance and certain annuity contracts are exempt from garnishment, attachment, execution, or other seizure by creditors.⁶⁷ For many years, it was believed that if an estate was the recipient beneficiary, these protections did not apply.⁶⁸ Texas Insurance Code Section 1104.023 makes it clear that if a trustee of an inter vivos or testamentary trust is named as the beneficiary of a life insurance policy, the policy proceeds received by the trustee are not subject to the debts of the insured; however, the statutory language regarding estates as beneficiaries was not as clear.⁶⁹ As of September 1, 2013, Section 1108.052 of the Texas Insurance Code was amended to provide that the creditor exemptions apply regardless of whether the insured's estate is the beneficiary.⁷⁰

b. Retirement Plans and Other Qualified Savings Plans

Texas Property Code Section 42.0021 provides that a person's right to the assets held in or to receive payments under certain retirement plans and other qualified savings plans is exempt from attachment, execution, and seizure for the satisfaction of debts to the extent the retirement plan or account is exempt from federal income tax, or to the extent federal income tax on the person's interest is deferred until actual payment of benefits to the person pursuant to certain provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.⁷¹ These plans and accounts include stock bonus, pension, annuity, deferred compensation, profit-sharing, health, education, or similar plans or accounts, including: a retirement plan sponsored by a private employer, government, or church; a retirement plan for self-employed individuals; a simplified employee pension plan; an individual retirement account or annuity (including an inherited individual retirement account or annuity); a Roth IRA (including an inherited Roth IRA; a health savings account); a Coverdell education savings account; a plan or account established under Subchapter F, Chapter 54, Education Code, (including a prepaid tuition contract); a plan or account established under Subchapter G, Chapter 54, Education Code (including a savings trust account); a qualified tuition program of any state that meets the requirements of Section 529, Internal Revenue Code of 1986; a qualified ABLE program of any state that meets the requirements of Section 529A, Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and an annuity or similar contract purchased with assets distributed from a plan or account described above (collectively herein referred to as "qualified savings plans").⁷²

This statute was amended in 2013 to explicitly include Roth IRAs and inherited Roth IRAs and amended again in 2019 to include certain education accounts and ABLE accounts.⁷³ The statute makes clear that the interest of a person in a qualified savings plan that results from the death of another person is exempt to the same extent that the decedent's interest was exempt on the date of the decedent's death.⁷⁴ However, there is no such creditor protection afforded to an estate, so naming the client's "estate" as the beneficiary of a retirement plan or other qualified savings plan will subject those assets to claims of creditors of the estate.⁷⁵

c. Accounts with Survivorship Features

On the other hand, some assets that pass outside of the probate estate may still be subject to claims of creditors of the decedent.⁷⁶ For example, an account could pass outside of the decedent's probate estate pursuant to a right of survivorship (as discussed further below), but the account may still be subject to the debts of a deceased account holder.⁷⁷ Section 113.252(a) of the Texas Estates Code provides that a multiple-party account is not effective against an estate of a deceased party to transfer to a survivor the amounts of estate taxes and expenses charged under Subchapter A, Chapter 124 to the deceased party, pay on death (P.O.D.) payee, or beneficiary of the account; or if other assets of the estate are insufficient, amounts needed to pay debts, other taxes, and expenses of administration (including statutory allowances to the surviving spouse and minor children) or the claim of a secured creditor who has a lien on the account.⁷⁸ Any party receiving payment as a result of surviving must account to the personal representative for amounts the deceased party owned beneficially immediately before the party's death to discharge these claims and expenses, but only up to the amount that the party received.⁷⁹ However, the personal representative of the decedent may bring a proceeding to assert liability only if the personal representative receives a written demand by a surviving spouse, a creditor, or a person acting on behalf of a minor child of the decedent.⁸⁰ Any proceeding by the personal representative to recover the property must be commenced before the second anniversary of the decedent's death.⁸¹

d. Real Property Transferred by a Transfer on Death Deed

As discussed in greater detail below, real property may pass outside of probate via a transfer on death deed (or "TODD").⁸² If the transferor's estate is insufficient to satisfy a claim against the estate, expenses of administration, any estate tax owed by the estate, or an allowance in lieu of exempt property or family allowance, then property passing under a TODD may be liable for

The beneficiary of a TODD takes title to the property subject to all conveyances, encumbrances, assignments, contracts, mortgages, liens, and other interests to which the property is subject at the transferor's death.⁸⁴

G. Probate Avoidance

Many clients enter an estate planning attorney's office with preconceived notions about the horrors of probate.⁸⁵ Some have had a conversation with a banker about how much easier things are when assets pass pursuant to a right of survivorship and insist that as many assets as possible be structured as non-probate assets.⁸⁶ Other times, clients come to our office insisting that they need revocable trust planning to avoid probate altogether because their cousin's wife had such a terrible experience with her mother's probate in California.⁸⁷ Fortunately, with proper estate planning in place, the probate procedure in Texas is relatively straightforward, and many clients change their minds after a discussion about what is involved in Texas probate.⁸⁸ In some circumstances, of course, it may be appropriate to advise clients to engage in revocable trust planning, such as when a client would like management assistance with the client's assets or wants to keep any information regarding the client's estate plan out of public record.⁸⁹ In those situations, each non-probate asset should be structured to coordinate with the revocable trust planning.⁹⁰ This Article sets out a discussion regarding revocable trust planning below.⁹¹

There are reasons other than probate hysteria to arrange for certain assets to bypass probate, of course, which the attorney should consider.⁹² Often, clients want a household account to pass to their spouse at their death to avoid the possibility that the spouse will have to wait for the probate process to have access to necessary funds for living expenses.⁹³ Sometimes clients desire for there to be a fund immediately available for funeral expenses.⁹⁴ Some clients may own real property in another state with a cumbersome probate process and want to avoid the need for ancillary probate in that state.⁹⁵ One should explore these concerns when discussing the disposition of non-probate assets.⁹⁶

III. SPECIAL CONSIDERATIONS FOR A CLIENT WHO IS OR HAS BEEN MARRIED

A. Marriage

When representing clients who are married, one must give consideration to community property laws and the rights of spouses to non-probate assets, subject to any federal law preemptions.⁹⁷

1. Spouse's Community Property Interest

In Texas, if a client is married, the non-probate assets in the client's name are often community property (because they are acquired during the couple's marriage while residing in Texas).⁹⁸ Even though a non-probate asset may be community property, only the owner of a life insurance policy (usually the insured) or the participant in the retirement plan has the right to designate the beneficiary.⁹⁹ If the non-insured or non-participant spouse is not named as the beneficiary, the community property interest of the non-insured or non-participant spouse must be taken into account in beneficiary designation planning.¹⁰⁰ If the asset is payable to the surviving spouse, these issues become less critical.¹⁰¹ Furthermore, provisions in the deceased spouse's will providing for the non-pro rata division of community property assets can mitigate these issues.¹⁰²

2. Spouse's Rights in Plans Governed by Federal Law

In the case of certain qualified retirement plans and life insurance policies, federal law, specifically the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 (REA), requires that plans provide the participant's spouse with a mandatory death benefit upon the death of the participant or a joint and survivor annuity upon the retirement of the participant.¹⁰³ With regard to assets held in most employer-sponsored retirement plans, a non-participant spouse must give their consent to the beneficiary designation if the participant names someone other than the non-participant spouse as the beneficiary.¹⁰⁴ If a non-participant spouse desires to give their consent regarding such a designation, the consent must take the form prescribed by the statute.¹⁰⁵ Several cases have held that these REA-granted rights are not waived as a result of general waiver provisions in a premarital or antenuptial agreement.¹⁰⁶

Therefore, if the client expresses a desire to direct non-probate assets to anyone other than the client's spouse, it is prudent to determine whether the asset is subject to federal law that would prevent such a designation without the spouse's consent and plan accordingly.¹⁰⁷ Keep in mind that one spouse giving up rights to property that the spouse would otherwise have raises issues regarding joint representation that are beyond the scope of this Article.¹⁰⁸

B. Divorce

If a client has been divorced or has had a marriage annulled, the attorney should review the divorce decree and all beneficiary designations for non-probate assets.¹⁰⁹

I. "Divorce Revokes" Statutes

If a client has designated the client's spouse as a beneficiary of a life insurance policy or retirement plan and fails to update the beneficiary designation after divorce, whether as a result of forgetfulness, procrastination, or untimely death, Texas law may provide some protection.¹¹⁰ Texas Family Code Sections 9.301 and 9.302 provide that if a decree of divorce or annulment is rendered after a person has designated the person's spouse as a beneficiary under a life insurance policy, individual retirement account, employee stock option plan, stock option, or other form of savings, bonus, profit-sharing, or other employer plan or financial plan of an employee or a participant which was in force at the time of the divorce or annulment, a provision in favor of the former spouse is not effective unless: (1) the divorce decree designates the former spouse as the beneficiary; (2) the person redesignates the former spouse as the beneficiary after the divorce; or (3) the former spouse is designated to receive the proceeds in trust for, on behalf of, or for the benefit of a child or a dependent of either the person or the former spouse.¹¹¹ If either of those sections acts to revoke a designation of the former spouse as a beneficiary, the proceeds or benefits are payable to the named contingent beneficiary, or if there is no named contingent beneficiary, to the estate of the deceased spouse.¹¹²

In 2015, the "divorce revokes" rule was extended to survivorship designations on P.O.D. accounts and multiple-party accounts (collectively referred to herein as multiple-party accounts).¹¹³ Texas Estates Code Section 123.151(b) now states that if a decedent created a multiple-party account and their marriage ended—through divorce, an annulment, or being declared void—any P.O.D. or survivorship agreement regarding that account and the decedent's former spouse or relative of that spouse, who is unrelated to decedent is not effective.¹¹⁴ Exceptions to ineffectiveness arise if: (1) the divorce decree specifies the former spouse or former spouse's relative as the P.O.D. payee or beneficiary, or reaffirms the existing survivorship agreement for the former spouse or relative; (2) after the marriage was dissolved, the decedent redesignated the former spouse or former spouse's relative as either the P.O.D. payee or the beneficiary, or reaffirmed the survivorship in writing; or (3) the former spouse or former spouse's relative is designated to receive the proceeds for or on behalf of a child or dependent of the former spouse or decedent.¹¹⁵

Unlike the "divorce revokes" statutes for life insurance and retirement plans, Section 123.151 extends to any relative of the former spouse if the person is not also a relative of the decedent.¹¹⁶ A "relative" is anyone related to someone else by consanguinity or affinity.¹¹⁷ Consanguinity is where two people either share a common ancestor or one is descended from the other.¹¹⁸ Affinity occurs either through marriage or by a spouse of one person related by consanguinity of another, like an in-law.¹¹⁹

If the statute revokes a pay on death or survivorship provision, the account may be paid to the named alternative P.O.D. payee or beneficiary, or to the decedent's estate if no alternative is named.¹²⁰

The statutes regarding transfer on death deeds also contain a "divorce revokes" provision.¹²¹ Divorce of the transferor and the designated beneficiary will result in the revocation of the TODD if notice of the final divorce decree is recorded before the death of the transferor in the county in which the TODD is recorded.¹²²

2. Limitations if Asset is Governed by Federal Law

Attorneys should not blindly advise clients to rely on these "divorce revokes" statutes, especially regarding non-probate assets governed by federal law.¹²³ The United States Supreme Court (the Court) has held that when a "divorce revokes" statute acts to change the disposition of an asset governed by federal law, federal law preempts the statute.¹²⁴

In Egelhoff v. Egelhoff, a life insurance policy and pension plan governed by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) named Mr. Egelhoff's former spouse as beneficiary.¹²⁵ His children from a prior marriage contended that the state of Washington's "divorce revokes" statute acted to revoke the designation in favor of the former spouse.¹²⁶ However, the Court held that because the statute attempted to include ERISA plans, it was expressly preempted by ERISA's preemption provision.¹²⁷ ERISA states that it "shall supersede any and all State laws insofar as they may now or hereafter relate to any employee benefit plan" covered by ERISA.¹²⁸ ERISA contains no "divorce revokes" language.¹²⁹ Accordingly, the Court held that benefits were properly payable to the former spouse under the beneficiary designation.¹³⁰

Further, a cause of action may not be available against a former spouse who receives the proceeds of an asset governed by federal law as the result of the failure of a “divorce revokes” provision.¹³¹ In Hillman v. Maretta, a life insurance policy governed by the Federal Employee’s Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 (FEGILIA) was at issue.¹³² The parties in that case agreed that the portion of a Virginia statute revoking the designation of the former spouse as beneficiary was preempted by FEGILIA.¹³³ At issue, however, was another provision of the statute, which created a cause of action rendering a former spouse liable to the person who would have received the asset if the “divorce revokes” provision was not preempted.¹³⁴ The Court held that the provision in the statute creating a cause of action against the former spouse was likewise preempted.¹³⁵

Accordingly, if a client has been divorced, the client should be advised to review any beneficiary designations and account agreements immediately and update them as necessary.¹³⁶

3. Proper Form of Waiver by Spouse

In addition to being wary of “divorce revokes” statutes, one cannot always rely on the language in a decree or agreement of divorce in connection with a former spouse’s rights in an asset governed by federal law.¹³⁷

In Kennedy v. Plan Administrator for DuPont Savings & Investment Plan, at Mr. Kennedy’s death, his ERISA-governed savings and investment plan (SIP) named his former spouse as the beneficiary.¹³⁸ The Court ruled that benefits should be paid to the former spouse even though the decedent had subsequently been married to another woman, and the divorce decree between the former spouse and the decedent explicitly provided that the former spouse was divested of all of her rights in the SIP.¹³⁹ The Court ruled that the waiver by the former spouse in the divorce decree was not effective because it was not in the form required explicitly by the plan documents (a Qualified Domestic Relations Order, or QDRO).¹⁴⁰ Accordingly, the benefits were properly payable to the former spouse.¹⁴¹

In a situation such as this, presumably, there would be some cause of action against the former spouse in the context of contract law.¹⁴² However, concerning any non-probate asset that may be governed by federal law, the best practice would be to ensure that the instructions in the plan documents (often requiring a QDRO) are strictly followed with respect to divesting the former spouse of their interest in the asset.¹⁴³

4. Divorce Decree or Agreement Requiring Beneficiary Designation

If a client has been divorced, the divorce decree or agreement may require that the client designate the client's former spouse as the beneficiary of a non-probate asset, such as a life insurance policy.¹⁴⁴ Such a provision is relatively common when there are minor children involved and the client has a child support obligation to the former spouse.¹⁴⁵ An attorney must be careful not to advise the client to change the disposition of an asset that may be subject to such restrictions.¹⁴⁶ Therefore, it is advisable to review any documents related to the divorce that establish an ongoing obligation to the former spouse.¹⁴⁷

After each of the foregoing considerations has been discussed and evaluated, the attorney can make a recommendation regarding whether each non-probate asset should be structured so that it passes to the client's estate to be distributed in accordance with the client's will, outright to an individual or charity, or to a trustee of a trust, testamentary or otherwise.¹⁴⁸

IV. IDENTIFYING AND COORDINATING NON-PROBATE ASSETS

Before non-probate assets can be coordinated with the estate plan, they must be identified.¹⁴⁹ Generally, non-probate assets are those which, at the owner's death, pass via a statutory or contractual beneficiary designation contrary to the owner's will or under the laws of intestate succession.¹⁵⁰ When most people think about non-probate assets, the assets that immediately come to mind are life insurance policies and retirement accounts.¹⁵¹ Those are the easy, non-probate assets to point out to clients because clients generally remember that some kind of beneficiary designation was required in relation to those assets; however, they may not know where the beneficiary designation forms are and whom they named as beneficiary.¹⁵²

In reality, however, the universe of non-probate assets is much broader.¹⁵³ In some circumstances, clients may not realize that their joint brokerage account held as joint tenants with rights of survivorship, or other non-probate assets, will not pass according to the terms of the client's will.¹⁵⁴ It is the attorney's job to educate the client regarding how each asset will be distributed at the client's death and provide appropriate guidance.¹⁵⁵

In my experience, the most commonly unrecognized non-probate assets are multi-party accounts that are structured to pass pursuant to survivorship designations at the client's death.¹⁵⁶

A. Multi-Party Accounts

Chapter 113 of the Texas Estates Code governs multiple-party accounts, which include joint accounts, P.O.D. accounts, trust accounts, and convenience accounts.¹⁵⁷ Section 113.001(a) defines an account as a contract of deposit of funds between a depositor and a financial institution, and includes a checking or savings account, certificate of deposit, share account, or another similar arrangement.¹⁵⁸ Chapter 113 addresses many issues associated with multiple-party accounts, including rights of survivorship, ownership during life, and ownership at death.¹⁵⁹

There are special rules that govern accounts consisting of community property.¹⁶⁰ Ownership of community property during life is governed by relevant provisions of the Texas Family Code.¹⁶¹ Rules for how community property accounts pass with rights of survivorship can be found in Chapter 112 of the Texas Estates Code and are discussed separately below.¹⁶²

Please note that as used in this Article, the term “multi-party accounts” includes any account that involves more than one party, including joint accounts, P.O.D. or transfer on death (T.O.D) accounts, trust accounts, and convenience accounts.¹⁶³

I. Accounts with Survivorship Features

In Texas, there is a presumption that if two or more people own an asset, no survivorship right exists, and they own the property as tenants in common.¹⁶⁴ There must be some writing that affirmatively establishes survivorship right among the parties.¹⁶⁵ If a writing exists, Chapter 113 and Subchapter B of Chapter 111 of the Texas Estates Code control, or with regard to community property, Chapter 112 of the Texas Estates Code controls.¹⁶⁶ The requirements of these sections are discussed below.¹⁶⁷ The term “accounts with survivorship features” as used in this Article includes not only accounts that pass pursuant to rights of survivorship but also as a result of P.O.D. or T.O.D. designations.¹⁶⁸

a. Ownership During Life (Other Than Accounts of Community Property)

During the lifetimes of joint owners, joint accounts belong to the joint owners in proportion to the sums deposited by each of them.¹⁶⁹

In contrast, a P.O.D. account belongs to the original account holder or holders during their life and passes to the P.O.D. beneficiary only at the death of the account holder(s).¹⁷⁰

Likewise, a trust account for which no actual trust exists (e.g., an account simply styled “John Doe, Trustee for Jane Doe,” commonly referred to as a “Totten trust” or “poor man’s trust”) belongs beneficially to the trustee and passes to the trust beneficiary only at the death of the account holder.¹⁷¹ If more than one trustee is named, the beneficial rights between them are governed by the rules applicable to joint accounts.¹⁷² A trust account in this context is not to be confused with an irrevocable or revocable trust, established under a trust agreement that is separate from a deposit agreement.¹⁷³

The attorney should caution clients: with a multi-party account, excluding a convenience account, any party to the account may pledge the account for the party's debts.¹⁷⁴ The only protection is that the financial institution must provide other joint tenants, excluding P.O.D. payees, beneficiaries, and convenience signers, with written notice of any pledge of the account within thirty days after the security interest is perfected.¹⁷⁵

Also, with multi-party accounts other than convenience accounts, funds may be withdrawn by any party in excess of the party's net contributions.¹⁷⁶ However, the party making withdrawals greater than their net contributions may be liable for civil conversion or be criminally convicted of theft.¹⁷⁷

b. Ownership After Death

For joint accounts without any survivorship features, when one party to a joint account dies, ownership in their interest in the account does not pass to the other party but instead passes as part of the decedent's probate estate.¹⁷⁸

Texas Estates Code Sections 113.052 and 113.151 through 113.158 provide the requirements for establishing a right of survivorship in accounts other than community property accounts.¹⁷⁹ For a joint tenancy account, Section 113.151(a) provides that there must be a written agreement between the parties, signed by the party that dies.¹⁸⁰ In 2009, the Texas Supreme Court held in Holmes v. Beatty that simply titling the account as joint tenants created a right of survivorship.¹⁸¹ Texas Probate Code Section 439(a) (now Texas Estates Code Section 113.151(c)) was amended in 2011 to overturn this decision and clarify that merely titling an account as a joint account is insufficient to create a right of survivorship between the joint owners.¹⁸² Section 113.151(c) provides explicit language that, if included in an agreement, establishes a survivorship right "on the death of one party to a joint account, all sums in the account on the death vest in and belong to the surviving party as his or her separate property.”¹⁸³ Substantially similar language will also act to create a right of survivorship.¹⁸⁴

For a P.O.D. account, the agreement must be signed by the original payee(s), and upon the death of all original payees, the remaining funds transfer to the then surviving P.O.D. payee(s).¹⁸⁵

Likewise, for a trust account, the agreement must be signed by the trustee(s), and upon the death of all trustees, the then-remaining funds transfer to the surviving named beneficiaries.¹⁸⁶ If more than one trustee is named during the lifetimes of the trustees, the rights between the trustees are determined as joint tenants.¹⁸⁷ Although no explicit provision states what happens when one trustee dies, in conformity with these provisions, the Texas Supreme Court held that funds do not pass to a surviving trustee who did not contribute to the account and funds do not pass to the beneficiaries when there is a surviving trustee; instead, the account passes to the deceased trustee’s estate.¹⁸⁸

c. Uniform Account Form

The Texas Estates Code provides a uniform account form to conclusively establish the type of account indicated, other than community property accounts, whether it be with or without right of survivorship, and the form also allows one or more convenience signers to be added to each type of account.¹⁸⁹ Unfortunately, despite the safe harbors provided by Texas law, many financial institutions do not use the specific language provided in Section 113.151 for creating rights of survivorship or the form of account agreement provided in Section 113.052.¹⁹⁰

d. Community Property with Rights of Survivorship

If spouses own community property with rights of survivorship, in favor of the surviving spouse, Sections 112.001 through 112.253 of the Texas Estates Code control those accounts.¹⁹¹ Spouses may agree at any time that their community property will be subject to a right of survivorship in favor of the surviving spouse, as long as the agreement is in writing, is signed by both spouses, and contains language creating the survivorship.¹⁹² Note, the distinction here from other multi-party accounts is that both spouses must sign the agreement.¹⁹³ Section 452 of the Texas Probate Code (now Section 112.052(d) of the Texas Estates Code) was also amended in 2011 to overturn the Holmes v. Beatty decision discussed above, making a designation of joint tenancy insufficient to create a right of survivorship in community property.¹⁹⁴ Any one of four phrases will conclusively create a right of survivorship between spouses in community property:

- (1) “with right of survivorship;”
- (2) “will become the property of the survivor;”
- (3) “will vest in and belong to the surviving spouse;” or
- (4) “shall pass to the surviving spouse.”¹⁹⁵

In addition, any agreement that “otherwise meets the requirements of this chapter” will create a right of survivorship.¹⁹⁶

The creation of a right of survivorship does not affect the management rights of the property between the spouses.¹⁹⁷ Therefore, sole or joint management community property will remain so regardless of a right of survivorship.¹⁹⁸

2. Default Estate Planning by Financial Institutions

For estate planners, multi-party accounts with survivorship features can be frustrating.¹⁹⁹ For people of modest means, who have no estate tax or other trust planning in their wills, or for clients whose estate plan leaves all of their assets outright to adult beneficiaries, accounts with survivorship features may be fine.²⁰⁰ Many people have household checking accounts or other accounts with relatively small balances that are intended to pass outright to the surviving account holder.²⁰¹ Survivorship features on these accounts generally do not cause a problem, so long as the account holder understands that the account will pass outright to the survivor, and not under the account holder's will.²⁰²

In a typical estate plan that involves trust planning or multiple beneficiaries, however, it is generally best if accounts are held in a form without survivorship features.²⁰³ Otherwise, trusts can become unfunded or underfunded, or the property may pass to a single beneficiary when the decedent intended to benefit more than one beneficiary.²⁰⁴ Many practitioners have heard clients say that if they name Child A as the beneficiary of an account, Child A will just take care of everything and will share the account with the rest of Child A's siblings.²⁰⁵

Unfortunately, many advisors at banks and other financial institutions promote these accounts with survivorship features thinking that they are convenient for their clients without recognizing that such designations can thwart an otherwise sound estate plan.²⁰⁶ After death, it may not be possible to remedy these accounts, even by disclaimer, as discussed further below.²⁰⁷ Even with disclaimer as an option, the added expense and hassle may frustrate clients.²⁰⁸ Since most clients are naïve regarding these issues, it is vital to advise them how to title their accounts correctly.²⁰⁹

3. Changing Multi-Party Accounts to Remove Survivorship Features

Many clients are unaware of how their accounts are held, and accordingly, it is prudent to advise the client to review the account designations in connection with the estate planning process.²¹⁰ Bank or brokerage statements may indicate survivorship language on their account statements.²¹¹ Joint accounts often list two names, followed by the designation "JTWROS," "Jt. w/ Surv.," or with some other indication of survivorship.²¹² The account may also list one name, followed by the designation P.O.D., T.O.D., or some other indication of survivorship.²¹³ However, not all accounts with survivorship features are so clearly labeled.²¹⁴ Survivorship is governed by the account agreement or signature cards that were signed when the account was opened (or when someone's name was added to the account).²¹⁵ The terms of the account agreement or signature card, and not the names listed on the account statement, establish survivorship.²¹⁶

If necessary as part of the estate plan, the financial institution should be contacted to eliminate any survivorship designation.²¹⁷

Some financial institutions have proven uncooperative in altering these designations due to policy or precedent.²¹⁸ Section 113.157 of the Texas Estates Code, however, allows any party to a survivorship account to alter its effect by written order received by the financial institution.²¹⁹ The order must be signed by a party, received by the financial institution during the party's lifetime, and not countermanded by another written order of the same party during the party's lifetime.²²⁰ With regard to a community property survivorship account between spouses, a written agreement that does not provide another method of revocation must be signed by both spouses, or one spouse must sign the agreement and deliver it to the other spouse.²²¹ Accordingly, if a written order to a financial institution is made for such an account, both spouses should sign the document.²²²

Presumably, sending the letter to the financial institution by certified mail, return receipt requested, would satisfy any burden of proof with respect to this receipt requirement.²²³ The return receipt and copy of the letter should be retained by the client with the client's other estate planning documents.²²⁴

Most account agreements contain a provision regarding governing law or choice of law.²²⁵ Texas law may prohibit a bank from enforcing the laws of another state if the branch or a separate office of the bank that accepts the agreement is located in Texas.²²⁶ However, if an account agreement directs that the laws of a state other than Texas control, the client may find it difficult or impossible to remove survivorship provisions from multi-party accounts.²²⁷ This is especially true with the proliferation of online banking.²²⁸

For example, in its deposit agreement effective as of January 7, 2017, Ally Bank, a popular online bank, provides that “all joint accounts are titled as joint tenants with right of survivorship.”²²⁹ The agreement further provides that all of Ally Bank’s actions relating to the account “will be governed by the laws and regulations of the United States and, to the extent not preempted, the laws and regulations of the State of Utah.”²³⁰ Accordingly, a written order to Ally Bank pursuant to Texas Estates Code Section 113.157 may not be effective to remove a right of survivorship provision.²³¹ Anecdotally, I have also been told that GE Capital Bank account agreements have similar provisions concerning joint accounts.²³²

If a client has contacted a financial institution to eliminate a right of survivorship designation and has not been successful, the account agreement should be obtained and reviewed.²³³ An account agreement such as the one at Ally Bank may necessitate moving funds on deposit from the financial institution or changing the account to name only one account holder.²³⁴ Of course, clients attracted to a specific financial institution due to their interest rates or convenience may resist such a change.²³⁵ Attorneys need to advise clients of the impact of these issues on their estate plans.²³⁶

4. Alternative to Accounts with Survivorship Features

If a client would like one or more friends or family members named on the client’s account for purposes of convenience, or in the event of the client’s disability, the best alternative may be to establish the account as a “convenience” account.²³⁷ A convenience account allows an account holder to name someone to sign on the account but gives no right of ownership or right of survivorship to the convenience signer.²³⁸ In addition to not establishing a right of survivorship with the convenience signer, and in contrast to other multi-party accounts, the convenience account prevents the convenience signer from pledging the account for the convenience signer's debts.²³⁹ When the owner dies, the owner's interest in the account passes under the owner's will or pursuant to the laws of intestate succession.²⁴⁰ If properly styled as a convenience account, an account does not give rise to the problems associated with accounts with survivorship features.²⁴¹ Unfortunately, not every financial institution provides this option.²⁴²

B. Securities and Contracts Other Than Deposits of Funds

Section 111.052 of the Texas Estates Code covers a myriad of contracts, including insurance policies, employment contracts, promissory notes, retirement accounts, securities, and accounts with financial institutions.²⁴³ Section 111.052 states that if any of these contracts are at issue, the Texas Estates Code will not invalidate any provision in a written agreement related to these contracts that makes the account nontestamentary because of a right of survivorship, forgiveness of debt, or beneficiary designation.²⁴⁴ In other words, the contract controls, rather than the statutes.²⁴⁵

Assets that are transferred pursuant to beneficiary designations include, but are not limited to life insurance policies on the client's life; qualified or non-qualified retirement plans and IRAs, including rollover IRAs, in which the client is the participant; tax-deferred annuities in which the client is the annuitant or owner; and immediate annuities in the client's name.²⁴⁶ Throughout this discussion, the term "sponsoring company" refers to the insurance company in the case of an insurance policy or annuity on the client's life, the administrator of the retirement plan in which the client participates, the custodian or trustee of the client's IRA or IRA rollover, or any other institution responsible for the administration of a non-probate asset requiring a beneficiary designation.²⁴⁷

The beneficiary designation form, when properly completed and returned to the sponsoring company, is simply a contract between the client and the sponsoring company in which the sponsoring company agrees to pay the benefits to the named beneficiary at the time of the client's death.²⁴⁸ Because payment of these benefits is based upon contract law, all of the requirements imposed by the sponsoring company must usually be met in order for the contract to be honored.²⁴⁹ For example, the sponsoring company will frequently require that the beneficiary designation be made on the company's form and delivered to the company on a timely basis.²⁵⁰

Accordingly, for every asset that passes according to a beneficiary designation, a change of beneficiary form should be obtained from the sponsoring company.²⁵¹

1. Absence of Beneficiary Designation

If the client fails to complete a beneficiary designation form, distribution of the asset at the client's death will be subject to the fine print in the sponsoring company's contract with the client.²⁵² The contracts of sponsoring companies vary greatly, and accordingly, disposition of non-probate assets in the absence of a beneficiary designation vary as well.²⁵³ In many cases, the client's estate becomes the default recipient of property if no beneficiary has been named.²⁵⁴ In other cases the client's spouse or children may be the default recipients, which may not align with the client's wishes, especially when minor children are involved.²⁵⁵

2. Naming Contingent Beneficiaries

In many cases, it is prudent to recommend that the client name both a primary and a contingent (secondary) beneficiary of each non-probate asset for which a beneficiary designation is required.²⁵⁶ This is because

(i) something could happen to both the client and the named primary beneficiary, in which case the contingent beneficiary would become the primary beneficiary; or (ii) if the primary beneficiary survives the client, naming a contingent beneficiary will give the primary beneficiary additional options through disclaimer.²⁵⁷

It is not typically necessary to name a contingent beneficiary if the primary beneficiary is the trustee under the client's will or revocable trust.²⁵⁸ However, if the sponsoring company insists on a contingent beneficiary, in most circumstances it may be acceptable to name the client's estate as the contingent beneficiary.²⁵⁹

3. Problems That Sometimes Arise When Trusts Are Named as Beneficiaries

In many situations, the client's estate tax, creditor protection, and distribution goals will best be accomplished by naming the trustee of a trust as the beneficiary of a non-probate asset.²⁶⁰ In discussions with clients, attorneys often refer to "naming a trust" as the beneficiary as a form of shorthand.²⁶¹ However, trusts are not legal entities that can hold title.²⁶² Accordingly, the trustee of the trust should be named on each beneficiary designation form.²⁶³ Often, the trusts into which these assets are passing are testamentary trusts, and the proper beneficiary designation is "The Trustee(s) named in the Will of [Name of Client]" or "The Trustee named in the [Revocable Trust]," as applicable.²⁶⁴ However, when clients attempt to submit beneficiary designation forms with this language, they sometimes run into trouble.²⁶⁵ This Article lists some of the commonly encountered problems, and possible solutions are listed below.²⁶⁶

a. The Sponsoring Company Wants the Trustee's Name Listed

Some sponsoring companies do not like a generic designation of the trustee named in the client's will or revocable trust.²⁶⁷ Rather, they insist on having the actual name of the trustee listed.²⁶⁸ While the client's estate planning documents may name a primary trustee and provide for alternate trustees who will serve in the event that the primary trustee fails or ceases to serve, until the time of the client's death, there is no way to know who will be serving as the trustee.²⁶⁹ Although you could try to explain this to the employee of the sponsoring company who is making the request, in our experience, bureaucrats are often very inflexible.²⁷⁰ As an alternative to the generic designation recommended to the client whose estate planning is through a will, the client may designate the client's primary trustee by name, as the trustee in the client's will, followed by "(or his/her successor)."²⁷¹ For example, John Doe has named Jane Doe as the primary trustee in his will.²⁷² Therefore, he would word his beneficiary designation as follows: "Jane Doe, Trustee under the will of John Doe (or her successor)."²⁷³

b. The Sponsoring Company Wants the Date of the Will Listed

Some sponsoring companies want the date the client's will was signed included in the beneficiary designation.²⁷⁴ If required, it is generally not a problem to include the date of the will.²⁷⁵ However, the attorney should advise clients that the beneficiary designation should be updated each time a new will or other estate planning document impacting the non-probate asset is signed.²⁷⁶

c. The Sponsoring Company Insists on a Time Limit for Probating the Will

Some sponsoring companies want to add a provision to a trustee beneficiary designation stating that the benefits will be paid to the trustee under the will only if the will is probated within a certain number of months.²⁷⁷ Generally, this is fine; the client's family or other people involved in the client's estate plan will need to be sure that the will is probated within the specified time period.²⁷⁸

d. The Sponsoring Company Asks for Additional Beneficiary Information

Some sponsoring companies also want additional information regarding the named beneficiary, such as a current address, relationship, social security number, date of birth, etc.²⁷⁹ If the client is naming their spouse or any other individual as a beneficiary, the requested information should be included.²⁸⁰ However, if the client is naming the trustee in the client's will as a beneficiary, this information is primarily inapplicable.²⁸¹ This may be indicated on the form by entering "N/A" where appropriate.²⁸²

e. The Beneficiary Designation Form Is Not Consistent with the Attorney's Instructions

Most beneficiary designation forms are structured so that the words "Primary Beneficiary" appear first, followed by a space to provide the appropriate name(s).²⁸³ These forms then have a second section entitled either "Contingent Beneficiary" or "Secondary Beneficiary," followed by a space to list the name(s).²⁸⁴ It is possible, however, to encounter a form that is not set up in this manner (such as a form containing preprinted beneficiary designation options with boxes that must be checked).²⁸⁵ If there is an option to choose "other," that should be done with an indication to see an attachment on which primary and contingent beneficiaries can be named as recommended by the attorney.²⁸⁶ If the client is unable to determine how to complete a form, however, the client should reach out to the attorney for assistance.²⁸⁷ This Article discusses an attorney's participation in completing the paperwork to coordinate non-probate assets below.²⁸⁸

4. Delivering Beneficiary Designations

Once a beneficiary designation form has been completed, the completed form must be returned to the sponsoring company according to its instructions.²⁸⁹

a. Online Submission

Many sponsoring companies now allow beneficiary designation forms to be submitted online.²⁹⁰ If a form is returned to a sponsoring company in this manner, the client should print and retain a copy of the confirmation page or page indicating the revised beneficiary designations with the client's other estate planning documents.²⁹¹ If the form is submitted via email, the email should request written confirmation of receipt.²⁹²

b. Submission Via Fax or Mail

If a beneficiary designation form is submitted via mail, it should be sent by certified or registered mail with a return receipt requested or by another trackable method.²⁹³ The return receipt or confirmation of delivery and copy of the letter transmitting the completed beneficiary designation should be retained by the client with the client's other estate planning documents.²⁹⁴ If a beneficiary designation form is sent via fax, a copy of the fax transmission sheet should be retained in the same manner.²⁹⁵ In our experience, if proof is given to a sponsoring company that it received the beneficiary designation form, the beneficiary designation form will be honored.²⁹⁶

5. Following Up

A transmission to a sponsoring company of a completed beneficiary designation form (whether by email, fax, or mail) should always request written confirmation from the sponsoring company that a change has been made.²⁹⁷ Once written confirmation is received from the sponsoring

If confirmation that the change has been made is not received within a reasonable period of time (e.g., two weeks), the client should follow up to ensure that the change has been made.²⁹⁹ Often, beneficiary designations can be viewed online.³⁰⁰ However, if the beneficiary designation is not available online, the sponsoring company should be contacted to inquire whether the change has been made and to ask for written documentation regarding the same.³⁰¹

C. Real Property Held with Survivorship Features

Before 2015, it was relatively uncommon for real property in Texas to be held with survivorship features.³⁰² However, in 2015, a Texas version of the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act (URPTODA) was enacted in Chapter 114 of the Texas Estates Code as the Texas Real Property Transfer on Death Act, and subsequently, nontestamentary transfers of real property in Texas have become more common.³⁰³

In many other states, it is customary for joint owners to hold real property in a way that creates some right of survivorship between them.³⁰⁴ Accordingly, if the client owns real property in a state other than Texas or any other foreign jurisdiction, it is prudent to request a copy of the deed to the property so that a determination can be made regarding whether the property is held with rights of survivorship.³⁰⁵

1. Transfer on Death Deeds

The Texas Real Property Transfer on Death Act authorizes a transfer on death deed (sometimes called a TODD) that transfers an individual's interest in real property to be effective on the death of the transferor.³⁰⁶

A TODD only affects interests in the real property at the death of the transferor.³⁰⁷ During the lifetime of the transferor, a TODD does not affect the interest or rights of the transferor or any other owner, and it will not affect the transferor's eligibility for any form of public assistance.³⁰⁸ Likewise, the rights of a subsequent transferee or the rights of a secured or unsecured creditor or future creditor of the transferor are not affected by the TODD, even if the transferee or creditor has actual or constructive notice of the deed.³⁰⁹ With respect to the beneficiary named in the TODD, no legal or equitable interests in the property are created, it will not affect the beneficiary's eligibility for any form of public assistance, and the property will not be subject to the claims of the beneficiary's creditors.³¹⁰

a. Form of Transfer on Death Deed

In order for a TODD to be effective, it must contain the essential elements and formalities of a recordable deed, state that the transfer of an interest in real property to the designated beneficiary is to occur at the transferor's death, and be recorded in the deed records in the county clerk's office of the county where the real property is located before the transferor's death.³¹¹ The deed must have been executed and acknowledged on or after September 1, 2015 (the effective date of the Act).³¹² The transferor must execute the deed; the deed may not be created through the use of a power of attorney.³¹³

When enacted, Subchapter D of Chapter 114 contained a statutory form TODD, which was subsequently revised in 2017.³¹⁴ However, the statutory form was frequently criticized for being confusing, and in 2019, Subchapter D of Chapter 114 was repealed by House Bill 2782.³¹⁵ The repeal of the statutory form did not affect the validity of transfer on death deeds.³¹⁶ Section 47 of House Bill 2782 expressly provided that “[t]he repeal of Subchapter D, Chapter 114, Estates Code, by this Act does not affect the validity of a transfer on death deed or a cancellation of a transfer on death deed executed before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.”³¹⁷ That same year, Section 22.020(b) of the Government Code was amended by Senate Bill 874 to direct the Texas Supreme Court to promulgate a form of TODD and a form revocation of TODD, as well as instructions for the proper use of each form.³¹⁸ The Texas Supreme Court created a Probate Forms Task Force in 2016 to make recommendations to the Court regarding the other forms to be promulgated by the Court pursuant to Government Code Section 22.020.³¹⁹ The Probate Forms Task Force has now been tasked with not only creating the form TODD but also with creating instructions and revocation for the form.³²⁰ I am a member of the Probate Forms Task Force and can confirm that those items are on the Task Force’s current agenda.³²¹ However, it is likely to take quite some time before the documents are drafted, approved by the Court, and made available to the public.³²²

b. Revocation

A TODD can still be revocable regardless of whether the deed or another instrument contains a contrary provision.³²³ However, a TODD cannot be revoked or superseded by a will.³²⁴

It can be revoked by one of the following: (1) a subsequent TODD that revokes the preceding TODD, either expressly or by inconsistency; or (2) an instrument of revocation that expressly revokes the TODD.³²⁵ In either case, the revoking document must have been acknowledged by the transferor after the acknowledgment of the TODD being revoked and must be recorded before the transferor’s death in the deed records in the county clerk’s office of the county where the TODD is recorded.³²⁶ If a TODD was made by joint owners with right of survivorship, it might only be revoked by all of the living joint owners, unless the transferor is the last surviving joint owner.³²⁷

Divorce of the transferor and the designated beneficiary will also result in the revocation of the TODD if notice of the final divorce decree is recorded before the transferor's death in the deed records in the county clerk's office of the county where the TODD is recorded.³²⁸

A TODD can also be effectively revoked if the real property that is the subject of the TODD is subsequently transferred to someone else during the owner's lifetime and a valid instrument conveying the interest (or a memorandum sufficient to give notice of the conveyance of the interest) is recorded in the real property records in the county in which the TODD is recorded before the transferor's death.³²⁹

It should be noted that if a TODD is made by more than one transferor, and one of the transferors subsequently revokes the TODD, the revocation does not affect the deed as to the interest of any transferor who does not make that revocation.³³⁰

c. Effect of Death

In the event that a transferor is a joint owner with right of survivorship, the TODD is only effective to transfer property to the beneficiary named on the deed if the transferor is the last surviving joint owner.³³¹ If the transferor is survived by one or more other joint owners with rights of survivorship, the property belongs to the surviving joint owners.³³²

If the beneficiary named in the TODD survives the transferor by 120 hours, the interest in the real property is transferred to the designated beneficiary in accordance with the deed.³³³ If the beneficiary fails to survive the transferor (including failure to survive by 120 hours), that beneficiary's share lapses subject to the provisions of Subchapter D of Chapter 255 of the Texas Estates Code as if the TODD were a devise made in a will.³³⁴ Accordingly, unless the TODD provides otherwise, beneficiary designations in the deed will be subject to the so-called "anti-lapse statute," which establishes a default rule in the event that the beneficiary is a descendant of the testator or the testator's parent, the beneficiary does not survive the testator, and the will (or in this case, the TODD) does not cover the contingency of the beneficiary's survival.³³⁵ In that case, the descendants of a deceased beneficiary become substitute takers.³³⁶ Subject to the anti-lapse rule, concurrent interests are transferred to the beneficiaries in equal and undivided shares with no right of survivorship.³³⁷

Subject to Section 13.001 of the Texas Property Code (regarding the validity of an unrecorded instrument), the beneficiary of a TODD takes title to the property subject to all conveyances, encumbrances, assignments, contracts, mortgages, liens, and other interests to which the property is subject at the transferor's death.³³⁸

If a personal representative has been appointed for the transferor's estate, an administration of the estate has been opened, and the real property transferring under the TODD is subject to a lien or security interest (including a deed of trust or mortgage) the personal representative must give notice to the creditor of the transferor as the personal representative would any other secured creditor.³³⁹ The creditor must then make an election under Texas Estates Code Section 355.151 within the prescribed amount of time to have the claim treated as a matured secured claim or a preferred debt and lien claim.³⁴⁰ The claim is then subject to the claims procedures prescribed by Texas Estates Code Section 114.104.³⁴¹

If the transferor's estate is insufficient to satisfy a claim against the estate, expenses of administration, any estate tax owed by the estate, or an allowance in lieu of exempt property or family allowance, property passing under a TODD may be liable for those claims and expenses to the same extent as if it were part of the probate estate.³⁴² If a personal representative receives a demand for payment from a third party and does not commence a proceeding to enforce liability against the property within ninety days of the demand for payment, then a creditor, distributee of the estate, surviving spouse of the decedent, guardian or another appropriate person on behalf of a minor child or incapacitated adult child of the decedent, or any taxing authority may bring a proceeding to enforce the liability.³⁴³

2. Tenancy by the Entirety

Although it is not a form of ownership recognized in Texas, real property in many states may be held as a tenancy by the entirety.³⁴⁴ Tenancy by the entirety is a type of shared ownership of property available only to married couples.³⁴⁵ Generally, spouses who own property as tenants by the entirety each owns an undivided interest in the property, each has full rights to occupy and use the property, and each has a right of survivorship in the property so that upon the death of one of the spouses, the survivor is entitled to the decedent's share.³⁴⁶

3. Evaluating Real Property Survivorship Features

The attorney must make several considerations when advising clients regarding real property subject to a transfer on death deed, held in tenancy by the entirety, or with other survivorship features.³⁴⁷ For clients with estate tax or other trust planning in their wills or revocable trusts, the inclination may be to change how the property is held so that no survivorship feature exists.³⁴⁸ However, the attorney must weigh tax advantages and trust protections against the benefits of holding real property in a manner that provides a survivorship feature.³⁴⁹ If ownership of the real property would require a costly and cumbersome probate procedure in the state where the property is located, the client's interests may best be served by maintaining the survivorship feature to avoid probate.³⁵⁰ Additionally, under a tenancy by the entirety, it is typical that creditors of an individual spouse may not attach and sell the interest of a debtor spouse: only creditors of the couple may attach and sell the interest in the property owned by tenancy by the entirety.³⁵¹ If the client has concerns about creditors, it may be prudent to maintain the real property in a tenancy by the entirety.³⁵²

If it is ultimately determined that changing the way that real property is held in order to eliminate survivorship features is the best course of action, generally, a filing must be made in the real property records where the property is located to reflect the change.³⁵³ The requirements of such a filing in the jurisdiction where the property is located should be researched, and a deed or other document should be prepared and filed accordingly.³⁵⁴ If local counsel does not prepare the document, local counsel should at least review the document before it is filed.³⁵⁵

D. Motor Vehicles Held with Survivorship Features

It is now relatively easy to pass title to a Texas vehicle in a nontestamentary manner.³⁵⁶ The Texas Department of Motor Vehicles has promulgated forms that can be used to create rights of survivorship between joint owners or to transfer a motor vehicle to a beneficiary on the owner's death.³⁵⁷

1. Rights of Survivorship

If a vehicle is titled in Texas in the names of multiple owners, the bottom section of the title contains an agreement that can be signed and dated by the co-owners to create rights of survivorship between them.³⁵⁸ If that portion of the title is completed and signed, the parties agree that the ownership of the vehicle described in the title shall from that day forward be held jointly, and in the event of death of any of the persons named, the ownership of the vehicle shall vest in the survivor(s).³⁵⁹

If the vehicle is not titled or registered in the names of all persons who intend to own the vehicle jointly with rights of survivorship, then rights of survivorship may also be created by the completion of a Texas Department of Motor Vehicles Form VTR-122, Rights of Survivorship Ownership

Agreement for a Motor Vehicle.³⁶⁰ Upon completion of the Form VTR-122, two options are available.³⁶¹

A “Survivorship Rights” remark can be placed on the title by submitting the completed Form VTR-122 with a Texas Department of Motor Vehicles Form 130-U, Application for Texas Title and/or Registration, to a county tax assessor-collector’s office.³⁶² In addition to the remark, up to two names can be printed as survivors on the Texas title.³⁶³ If there are more than two survivors, “Multiple Survivors” is printed.³⁶⁴ After the death of any of the persons named in the agreement, the survivor(s) may obtain a new Texas title by submitting a new Form 130-U in the name of the survivor(s) supported by a copy of the deceased person(s) death certificate.³⁶⁵

Alternatively, the original Form VTR-122 can be retained, and after the death of any person(s) named in the agreement, the survivor(s) may obtain a new title by submitting a new Form 130-U in the name of the survivor(s), the original completed form VTR-122, and a copy of the death certificate of the deceased party.³⁶⁶

A rights of survivorship agreement may be revoked only if the persons named in the agreement file a joint application for a new title in the name of the person or persons designated in the application.³⁶⁷ Accordingly, if a Texas title reflects a “Survivorship Rights” remark, a new Form 130-U and the Texas title signed by all individuals listed on the Rights of Survivorship agreement must be submitted to a county tax assessor collector’s office to remove the remark and issue a new Texas title in the owners’ names without the remark.³⁶⁸

2. Beneficiary Designation

Prior to 2017, the non-probate transfer of vehicles was only available to parties who owned the vehicle jointly during life.³⁶⁹ However, in 2017, it also became possible for the owner of a motor vehicle to transfer the owner’s interest to a sole beneficiary at the owner’s death by designating a beneficiary as provided by Section 501.0315 of the Texas Transportation Code.³⁷⁰ If joint owners with right of survivorship own a motor vehicle that is the subject of a beneficiary designation, the beneficiary designation must be made by all of the joint owners.³⁷¹

The beneficiary designation can be made by completing a Texas Department of Motor Vehicles Form VTR-121.³⁷² Unlike the Form VTR-122 creating rights of survivorship, the beneficiary designation on a Form VTR-121 is not effective if it is held until after the owner's death.³⁷³ The Texas Transportation Code provides explicitly that a beneficiary designation or a change or revocation of a beneficiary designation made on an application for the title of a motor vehicle that has not been submitted to the department before the death of a vehicle's owner or owners who made, changed, or revoked the designation, as applicable, is invalid.³⁷⁴ Accordingly, in order to effectively name a beneficiary, a Form VTR-121 and Form 130-U should be completed, and both forms, along with relevant title application fee, should be submitted to the county tax assessor-collector's office before the owner's death.³⁷⁵

The beneficiary designation may be changed or revoked at any time without the consent of the designated beneficiary.³⁷⁶ However, if joint owners made the designation with rights of survivorship, the beneficiary designation may only be revoked by all of the joint owners or by the last surviving joint owner.³⁷⁷ To revoke or change a beneficiary designation, another Form VTR-121 form must be completed and submitted with a Form 130-U, the title application fee, and the current title.³⁷⁸

During the lifetime of the owner of the motor vehicle, a beneficiary designation does not: (1) affect an interest or right of the owner or owners making the designation, including the right to transfer or encumber the motor vehicle that is the subject of the designation; (2) create a legal or equitable interest in favor of the designated beneficiary in the motor vehicle that is the subject of the designation, even if the beneficiary has actual or constructive notice of the designation; (3) affect an interest or right of a secured or unsecured creditor or future creditor of the owner or owners making the designation, even if the creditor has actual or constructive notice of the designation; or (4) affect an owner's or the designated beneficiary's eligibility for any form of public assistance, subject to applicable federal law.³⁷⁹

3. Evaluating Motor Vehicle Survivorship Features

Even without survivorship features, in Texas the transfer of a vehicle after death is relatively simple.³⁸¹ However, in circumstances in which the client knows the person to whom the client would like the vehicle to pass (e.g., the surviving spouse or a child who uses the vehicle), the foregoing nontestamentary transfers are useful.³⁸² Generally, the value of a vehicle makes up a relatively insignificant portion of the owner's estate, and testamentary transfers of vehicles are typically made outright.³⁸³ Accordingly, having the vehicle pass via right of survivorship or beneficiary designation will generally not thwart the estate plan.³⁸⁴ Additionally, the joint owner or beneficiary will be able to transfer title as soon as the death certificates are available and will not have to wait for the probate process or rely on the personal representative to complete the paperwork necessary to transfer title.³⁸⁵

V. ESTATE PLANNING THROUGH A REVOCABLE TRUST

A discussion about non-probate assets would be incomplete without addressing revocable trusts.³⁸⁶ Technically, any trust that can be revoked is a revocable trust.³⁸⁷ However, in the context of estate planning, revocable trusts are often used as will substitutes where a client's assets are transferred to the trust during the client's lifetime, and the terms of the trust instrument dictate the passage of assets at the client's death.³⁸⁸ Because of the availability of independent administration in Texas, estate planning through revocable trusts is much less common here than in other jurisdictions where probate is more cumbersome and costly.³⁸⁹ Nevertheless, revocable trust planning can still be beneficial to many clients.³⁹⁰

A. Determining the Advisability of Revocable Trust Planning

The determination regarding whether a revocable trust is an appropriate estate planning tool will be made on a case-by-case basis.³⁹¹ The benefits of revocable trust planning should be considered and weighed against the additional cost and administrative efforts of transferring assets to the trust based on each client's particular needs.³⁹²

1. Probate Avoidance

If a revocable trust is fully funded with all of the client's probate-type assets during the client's lifetime, it will not be necessary for the decedent's estate to go through the probate process.³⁹³ In Texas, this may not be a driving factor, but in other jurisdictions probate can be an expensive and cumbersome proposition.³⁹⁴ Real property owned by a Texas resident in another state may be subject to ancillary estate administration in that state if it is not held with survivorship features.³⁹⁵ Accordingly, if a Texas client has real property in another jurisdiction in which probate is undesirable, a revocable trust can be an effective tool to avoid the ancillary probate.³⁹⁶ Similarly, for mobile clients who are based in Texas but frequently move, implementing estate planning through a revocable trust can minimize the need for an overhauled estate plan after each move.³⁹⁷

2. Privacy

The desire for privacy is also frequently cited as a reason for revocable trust planning.³⁹⁸ Once filed for probate, a will becomes a public record and is often immediately available for viewing by anyone who has access to a computer.³⁹⁹ In contrast, a revocable trust remains private with respect to uninterested parties.⁴⁰⁰ Even if a pour-over will is used to fund the trust post-death, the revocable trust should not be part of the probate record.⁴⁰¹

If a decedent's estate is probated, the personal representative of the estate must prepare a detailed inventory of all estate property.⁴⁰² The default rule is that the inventory must be filed with the court, and many clients and beneficiaries balk at the idea of such personal information becoming public record.⁴⁰³ However, since 2011, it has been possible for a personal representative to avoid filing the inventory in Texas.⁴⁰⁴ In an independent administration, if there are no unpaid debts (other than secured debts, taxes, and administration expenses) at the time the inventory is due, then instead of filing the inventory itself, an independent executor may provide each of the beneficiaries of the estate with a copy of the inventory and file an affidavit with the court stating that the inventory has been prepared, there are no unpaid debts, and the inventory has been provided to the beneficiaries.⁴⁰⁵ If a beneficiary is only entitled to receive gifts with an aggregate value of $2,000 or less, has received all of the amounts to which the beneficiary is entitled to in the will, or has waived the right to receive the inventory, then the independent executor does not need to provide the inventory to the beneficiary before an affidavit in lieu of inventory is filed.⁴⁰⁶ The availability of the affidavit in lieu of inventory has alleviated some privacy concerns, but it is not always available.⁴⁰⁷ Accordingly, revocable trust planning remains the best method to ensure privacy.⁴⁰⁸

3. Immediate Access to Assets at Grantor's Death

If a decedent's estate must be probated, another detriment is that often there is some period of time after the decedent's death during which the decedent's assets cannot be accessed to pay debts or expenses or to be distributed to the beneficiaries.⁴⁰⁹ Even with respect to joint accounts, once the financial institution learns of the decedent's death, the entire account may be frozen, and the surviving spouse or other co-owner may not be able to access their funds until a personal representative is appointed.⁴¹⁰ Once an application to probate a will has been filed with the court, a hearing may not be held for at least ten days.⁴¹¹ Even after that statutory waiting period has lapsed, it can take weeks or even months before the court has availability for the hearing.⁴¹² However, if assets are held in a revocable trust, then at the decedent's death the assets of the trust remain available to the trustee or become immediately available to the successor trustee of the trust.⁴¹³

4. Reducing Risk of Contest

If the client has concerns that the estate plan may be contested, a fully funded revocable trust may offer better protection than planning through a will.⁴¹⁴ Although a revocable trust can be contested on similar grounds to a will, it may be more difficult for a disgruntled family member or another party to prove they have standing to challenge the trust.⁴¹⁵ It may also be more difficult to allege lack of capacity or undue influence if the trust is administered for a long period of time before the grantor's death.⁴¹⁶ Additionally, since a revocable trust does not have to be filed at the decedent's death as a will does, a potential claimant may not ever be put on notice that the trust exists or become aware of the terms of the trust.⁴¹⁷

5. Management Vehicle on Incapacity

Planning through a revocable trust may also be a good option if a client has early signs of incapacity or would simply rather have someone else manage the client's financial affairs.⁴¹⁸ In that case, a revocable trust that has been funded can serve as an effective management vehicle and can avoid the need for a court-created guardianship.⁴¹⁹ Even if the client has executed a power of attorney naming an agent to manage the client's affairs, it is often easier for a trustee to access and manage property than it is for an agent acting under a power of attorney.⁴²⁰

B. Funding a Revocable Trust

If it has been determined that revocable trust planning is appropriate for the client, the next steps are determining which assets will be funded into the revocable trust and making the appropriate transfers.⁴²¹ Of course, probate can be avoided only if all of the client's probate-type assets are funded into the trust before the client's death.⁴²² Transferring some assets into the trust may not pose a problem.⁴²³ However, other assets may require deeper consideration.⁴²⁴

1. Transfer of Real Property

The attorney must also evaluate several issues that are unique to real property in connection with a transfer of the property to a revocable trust.⁴²⁵

a. Homestead Issues

In Texas, homesteads are afforded special treatment.⁴²⁶ Subject to some exceptions, the Property Code provides that homesteads are exempt from seizure or forced sale for the claims of creditors or debts.⁴²⁷ Additionally, Section 11.13 of the Texas Tax Code provides for a property tax reduction for a homestead.⁴²⁸ In order for property held in trust to qualify for this treatment, both the Texas Property Code and the Texas Tax Code require that the trust be a "qualifying trust."⁴²⁹ However, the definitions of a "qualifying trust" differ slightly in each of those statutes.⁴³⁰

429. PROP. § 41.0021(a); TAX § 11.13(a), (j).

430. PROP. § 41.0021(a); TAX § 11.13(a), (j).

Under the Property Code, in order for a trust to be a “qualifying trust,” the instrument or court order creating the trust must provide that the grantor or beneficiary has the right to (1) revoke the trust without the consent of another person; (2) exercise an inter vivos general power of appointment over the property that qualifies as the homestead; or (3) use and occupy the residential property as the grantor’s or beneficiary’s principal residence at no cost other than the payment of taxes and other costs and expenses specified in the trust agreement (i) for the life of the grantor or beneficiary; (ii) for a term of years specified in the trust agreement; or (iii) until the trust is revoked by an instrument recorded in the real property records which sufficiently describes the property.⁴³¹

The Tax Code provides that a qualifying trust is a trust “in which the agreement, will, or court order creating the trust, an instrument transferring property to the trust, or any other agreement that is binding on the trustee” grants the grantor or beneficiary of the trust “the right to use and occupy” the grantor’s or “beneficiary’s principal residence . . . rent free and without charge except for taxes and other costs and expenses specified in the instrument or court order.”⁴³²

Recently there has been a flurry of discussion on this particular topic because of a 2019 bankruptcy case.⁴³³ The San Antonio bankruptcy court in In re Cyr held that a home owned by a trust was not protected from creditors under the Property Code because the language in the trust instrument allowing the debtor to live in the home “rent free and without charge,” which followed the language in the Texas Tax Code, was not the same as providing that the debtor could live there “at no cost,” which is the phrase used in the Texas Property Code.⁴³⁴

However, the debtor subsequently appealed to the district court.⁴³⁵ The district court reversed the bankruptcy court after determining that “rent free and without charge” meant the same thing as “at no cost,” and that as a result, the homestead was exempt from creditor claims in the bankruptcy.⁴³⁶

Even though In re Cyr was reversed, if a homestead is being transferred to a revocable trust, it is a good practice to make sure that the trust agreement contains language necessary to make it a “qualifying trust” under both the Tax Code and the Property Code.⁴³⁷ Including language providing that the grantor may use and occupy the principal residence “at no cost, or rent free and without charge” and referencing both relevant statutes should cover those bases.⁴³⁸

b. Mortgage Issues

If the real property being transferred to the trust is encumbered by debt, practitioners should be mindful of due-on-sale clauses, which are provisions in loan documents that allow a lender to accelerate the note if the borrower transfers the property to a third party.⁴³⁹ With respect to a loan secured by a lien on residential real property containing less than five dwelling units, however, federal law prohibits a lender from exercising its option pursuant to a due-on-sale clause upon certain transfers.⁴⁴⁰ The exemptions from due-on-sale clauses include a transfer into an inter vivos trust in which the borrower is and remains a beneficiary and which does not relate to a transfer of rights of occupancy in the property.⁴⁴¹ As a result, the transfer to a revocable trust of a client’s homestead and any other residential real property with less than five dwelling units should not result in the exercise of a due-on-sale clause.⁴⁴²

If real property being transferred to the trust is subject to a due-on-sale clause and the transfer is not covered by a federal exemption, consent from the lender should be obtained before the property is transferred.⁴⁴³ Although lenders may give verbal confirmation that a due-on-sale clause will not be exercised, it is always best practice to obtain a written agreement to that effect.⁴⁴⁴ The agreement can be a simple document in which the lender acknowledges the existence of the due-on-sale clause but agrees that the clause will not be exercised as a result of the contemplated transfer.⁴⁴⁵ Because some lenders may still attempt to enforce the due-on-sale clause even if the property is subject to a federal exemption, it may be helpful to at least discuss with the lender before the transfer to make sure the lender understands the structure of the transfer and to confirm there will not be an issue.⁴⁴⁶

If a lender insists that a due-on-sale clause will be triggered on transfer, the client can choose to wait until the mortgage is paid or the loan is refinanced to make the transfer.⁴⁴⁷ If the client is concerned about continuing to own the property outright for a period of time, the client can sign a transfer on death deed with respect to the property, providing that at the death of the client the property will pass to the trustee of the revocable trust.⁴⁴⁸

c. Property Outside of Texas

If the client owns real property outside of Texas, the client should consult local counsel to identify any issues that may arise as the result of the transfer of the property to a revocable trust, and if appropriate, to assist with the preparation of the transfer documents.⁴⁴⁹ In states that impose a state inheritance or estate tax, while transferring real property to a revocable trust may avoid the need for probate in that state, it may not avoid the imposition of such a tax.⁴⁵⁰ In such event, it might be more advantageous to first transfer the property to an entity such as an LLC, and then transfer the LLC interest to the revocable trust.⁴⁵¹

d. Method of Transfer

Real property located in Texas can be transferred to the revocable trust by deed.⁴⁵² A “deed” is a written instrument, duly executed and delivered, conveying real property from one party to another.⁴⁵³ No particular form is required to convey title to land.⁴⁵⁴ Under the Texas Property Code, the only requirements for a deed are that it be in writing, signed by the grantor, and delivered to the grantee.⁴⁵⁵ If the intention to pass the title can be inferred, the courts will give effect to it and construe the words accordingly.⁴⁵⁶ However, a deed must accurately describe the property being conveyed and will be void if it fails to furnish the means of determining with reasonable certainty the land intended to be covered by it.⁴⁵⁷

Several types of deeds are commonly used in Texas.⁴⁵⁸ The differences between the deeds generally relate to what type of warranty the transferor is giving the transferee with respect to title to the property.⁴⁵⁹ Texas Property Code Section 5.022(b) expressly states that a covenant of warranty is not required in a conveyance, but warranties are commonly made in deeds.⁴⁶⁰ Whether the deed contains a general warranty, special warranty, or no warranty, the actual conveyance itself is not affected.⁴⁶¹ The warranty does not constitute a part of the conveyance nor strengthen or enlarge the title conveyed.⁴⁶² Rather, a warranty is a covenant by the grantor that if there is some defect in the title to the property, the grantor will assume liability for the loss to the grantee to the extent provided in the warranty.⁴⁶³

i. General Warranty Deed

If a deed contains a general warranty, it is an absolute guarantee that clear title exists as to the complete chain of title, all the way back to the inception of title from the sovereign (i.e., the State of Texas).⁴⁶⁴ The covenant of a general warranty is a continuing obligation that runs with the land, meaning that it passes from one transferee to another as the land is transferred.⁴⁶⁵ Accordingly, if any defect in title is later discovered, a grantor or the grantor's heirs or successors are liable to the grantee or any later owner of the property.⁴⁶⁶

Texas Property Code Section 5.022 provides a form for a general warranty deed, which contains the following language common in making the general warranty: "I do hereby bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators to warrant and forever defend all and singular the said premises unto the said grantee, his heirs, and assigns, against every person whomsoever, lawfully claiming or to claim the same, or any part thereof.”⁴⁶⁷

Because of the vast liability associated with a general warranty deed for defects in title potentially going back centuries, it is generally not advisable to use general warranty deeds to transfer property.⁴⁶⁸

ii. Special Warranty Deed

A special warranty in a deed also guarantees good title to the property, but not back to the sovereignty.⁴⁶⁹ The warranty covers only the period of time during which the grantor owns the land.⁴⁷⁰ The language of warranty in a special warranty deed is generally limited to defects in title arising “by, through, or under the grantor, but not otherwise.”⁴⁷¹ Because a special warranty deed restricts the grantor’s liability to any defects in title that arose after the grantor acquired the property, it is generally preferable to a general warranty deed and is the form that is generally best suited to the transfer of real property to a trust, as long as the client is confident that the client has good title to the property.⁴⁷²

iii. Deed Without Warranty

A deed without warranty is just what it sounds like—it does not contain any warranty of clear title.⁴⁷³ A disclaimer similar to the following is generally included: “This conveyance is made and accepted without warranty of title, whether statutory, expressed or implied and all such warranties are hereby excluded and waived.”⁴⁷⁴

Although this type of deed is not common, it may be used if uncertainty exists about a grantor’s title to the property.⁴⁷⁵ Because quitclaim deeds are generally viewed unfavorably in Texas, deeds without warranty may be used where quitclaim deeds might otherwise be used.⁴⁷⁶

iv. Quitclaim Deed

A quitclaim deed operates to convey the grantor's title to the property, if any, as opposed to the conveyance of the property itself.⁴⁷⁷ A grantor who executes a quitclaim deed may or may not have a valid interest in title or to the real property.⁴⁷⁸

It has been held that a recipient of a quitclaim deed takes with notice of all defects in title and equities of third persons.⁴⁷⁹ A party who acquires real property in which there is a quitclaim deed in the chain of title, however remote, cannot assert the protections that normally inure to the benefit of an innocent purchaser for value as against an adverse title, equity, or secret trust existing at the time the quitclaim was executed.⁴⁸⁰ For this reason, title companies generally dislike quitclaim deeds and may refuse to issue a title policy if a quitclaim deed is in the chain of title.⁴⁸¹ Accordingly, a practitioner should be wary of advising a client to accept a quitclaim deed, which may result in a cloud on the client's title to the property, and a quitclaim deed should not be used to transfer property if it can be avoided.⁴⁸²

v. Recording of Deed

Once the deed has been prepared and signed by the grantor, it should be recorded in the real property records where the property is located.⁴⁸³ In order to record an instrument conveying real property, the instrument must be signed and acknowledged by the grantor in the presence of two or more credible subscribing witnesses or acknowledged before and certified by an officer authorized to take acknowledgments or oaths, as applicable.⁴⁸⁴

e. Actions After Transfer

After real property is transferred to a revocable trust, the client should ensure that any liability insurance covering the property is transferred to the revocable trust.⁴⁸⁵ With respect to a homestead transferred to a revocable trust, the client will also have to reapply with the taxing authority for the homestead exemption for property tax purposes.⁴⁸⁶ If mineral interests are transferred to the revocable trust, the issuance of new division orders will also likely be required.⁴⁸⁷

f. Interests in Closely Held Businesses

A minefield of issues can arise when transferring closely held business interests.⁴⁸⁸ Accordingly, before any transfer is made, the entity's governing documents should be analyzed to identify any potential complications and to determine the requirements for an effective transfer.⁴⁸⁹ Some operating agreements will contain transfer restrictions prohibiting transfer of the interest, although in many cases exceptions to the restrictions will apply to transfers to trusts, such as revocable trusts.⁴⁹⁰ Transfers may also trigger buyout, buy/sell, or other similar clauses.⁴⁹¹ If these types of issues exist, amendments to the governing documents may be necessary in connection with the transfer.⁴⁹² Even if a transfer is permissible, it may be subject to approval by the partners, members, or management of the entity, or an opinion letter from attorney as to the tax or securities consequences may be required prior to a transfer being effective.⁴⁹³ While some of these requirements may be a mere formality, it is important that they are followed.⁴⁹⁴

2. Transfer of Other Assets

Other than the transfer of real property and closely-held business interests, in many cases, clients can work independently to fund assets into the trust.⁴⁹⁵

a. Bank Accounts

Cash or cash equivalents held in banks, credit unions, savings and loan associations, or other financial institutions should be transferred to new accounts in the name of the revocable trust.⁴⁹⁶ Although it is generally advisable that accounts with large sums on deposit be transferred, the client may choose not to retitle one or two smaller accounts that are used for day to day expenditures or household expenses.⁴⁹⁷ Unless such an account is held with survivorship features, however, the account will be subject to probate at the client's death.⁴⁹⁸

In most instances, financial institutions will request a copy of the trust agreement when establishing accounts for the trust.⁴⁹⁹ Rather than providing a copy of the trust agreement, a certification of trust, outlining only the identity and powers of the trustee and other statutorily required provisions, but not the dispositive terms, can be proffered instead.⁵⁰⁰

If the client has other investments, such as certificates of deposit, with a financial institution, the client should communicate with the financial institution regarding whether the change from the client as an individual to the trustee of the revocable trust will adversely affect the interest being paid on the investment.⁵⁰¹ If a penalty or a forfeiture of interest would be imposed because of the transfer, then to avoid financial loss, the client can wait until the certificate matures and transfer the funds at that time.⁵⁰²

b. Stocks and Bonds

With respect to stocks and bonds held in a brokerage account, the transfer will be handled much the same as for a bank account.⁵⁰³ For other publicly traded stocks or bonds, it will be necessary to work through a stockbroker or transfer agent to effectuate the transfer.⁵⁰⁴

With respect to stock in a privately held corporation, a stock power or other similar instructions should be provided to the company so that new stock certificates can be issued in the name of the trustee of the revocable trust.⁵⁰⁵

c. Promissory Notes

If the client is the holder of a promissory note or debt instrument, the client can generally endorse the note over to the trustee of a revocable trust.⁵⁰⁶ However, if there are security documents associated with the note such as a deed of trust, the client should consult with an attorney regarding the appropriate paperwork to be prepared and filed.⁵⁰⁷

d. Retirement Accounts and Life Insurance

Retirement funds are typically not transferred into the revocable trust during the participant's lifetime.⁵⁰⁸ Likewise, there is no need to transfer the ownership of life insurance policies to the revocable trust while the insured is alive.⁵⁰⁹ However, the trust can be named as a primary or contingent beneficiary of these assets if appropriate.⁵¹⁰ After weighing the considerations influencing the most appropriate disposition of non-probate assets (as discussed in Section II of this Article), the attorney may recommend that the trustee of the revocable trust be named as a primary or contingent beneficiary of these types of assets.⁵¹¹

e. Personal Effects and Collectibles

Generally, we do not recommend a documented transfer of household goods and personal effects to a revocable trust during the client's lifetime.⁵¹² However, if the client owns an asset or collection of significant value (e.g., valuable artwork or a coin collection), then those items may be transferred to the revocable trust through a bill of sale or specific assignment.⁵¹³

VI. THE ATTORNEY'S ROLE

So what is the role of an attorney preparing a client's estate plan in all of this?⁵¹⁴ How far must the attorney go to ensure that non-probate assets are appropriately coordinated with the estate plan?⁵¹⁵ Certainly, an attorney should ask about the client's non-probate assets and educate and advise clients regarding the disposition of these assets.⁵¹⁶ However, the extent of the attorney's actual participation in the activities required to coordinate non-probate assets should be determined by the individual attorney and the attorney's client and should be addressed in the engagement agreement between them.⁵¹⁷

A. Gathering Information

Before the initial meeting, if feasible, or during the initial meeting, the attorney should gather as much information as possible regarding the client's assets in order to identify each non-probate asset.⁵¹⁸ A helpful way to request this information is to ask that a client complete a data-gathering form.⁵¹⁹ The data-gathering form can request personal information about the client, the client's family, and others who may be involved in the client's estate plan, and any other information that will help the attorney to understand better the client's goals regarding the disposition of the client's estate.⁵²⁰ The data-gathering form should also request information about the client's assets which will assist the attorney in identifying any non-probate assets.⁵²¹

To avoid overwhelming clients with requests for information, the sample excerpt is not designed to gather all of the information that the attorney will need to evaluate and coordinate each non-probate asset.⁵²² Rather, it requests just enough information to alert the attorney that a certain type of non-probate asset exists (e.g., the client owns life insurance on their life).⁵²³ During the initial meeting, the attorney can gather additional information about each non-probate asset that will be required when advising clients about coordinating those assets with the overall estate plan (e.g., How many life insurance policies are there, and in what amounts? Are the policies term or whole life policies? Are they provided by the client's employer, which may rise to federal law issues? Who are the named beneficiaries of each policy?).⁵²⁴

In addition to requesting information about the client's assets, a data-gathering form should inquire about circumstances that may influence the way non-probate assets are handled.⁵²⁵ For example, if the client has been divorced, a divorce decree or agreement incident to divorce may subject the client to an ongoing obligation to a former spouse or may direct that the client hold life insurance naming the former spouse as a beneficiary.⁵²⁶ A client may be subject to a buy-sell agreement that requires the ownership of life insurance.⁵²⁷ It is important to identify each source of such an obligation and review the document imposing the obligation.⁵²⁸

B. Educating the Client About Non-Probate Assets

Even if a client has completed a beneficiary designation form with regard to a non-probate asset, the client may not understand that signing a will or revocable trust does not direct the disposition of all of the client's assets.⁵²⁹

The attorney must take the time to educate the client regarding what assets in the client's estate are non-probate assets, the considerations that are involved in directing the disposition of those assets, and the practical steps for coordinating non-probate assets with the overall estate plan.⁵³⁰

C. Participation in Coordination of Non-Probate Assets

The engagement agreement between the attorney and client should make clear whether the active coordination of non-probate assets (such as completing beneficiary designation forms or drafting documents to transfer assets to a revocable trust) is included in the engagement, or whether it will be undertaken by the attorney only at the explicit request of the client.⁵³¹ Our firm's typical engagement agreement states that we will assist the client with the preparation of beneficiary designation forms for their non-probate assets only to the extent that they request us to do so.⁵³² If the fee quoted for preparing estate planning is a "fixed fee," the agreement explicitly states that the fixed fee will not cover drafting or reviewing actual beneficiary designations, but that if such a service is requested, additional fees will be charged based on our standard hourly fees.⁵³³ Any work done in connection with funding a revocable trust is generally handled similarly.⁵³⁴

If the attorney is engaged to complete or review beneficiary designation forms and otherwise actively coordinate non-probate assets, the attorney should communicate with the client regarding the extent of the attorney's participation.⁵³⁵ For example, the attorney should either commit to following up with each sponsoring company to ensure that beneficiary designations have been changed as requested or advise the client that the client will be responsible for doing so.⁵³⁶

If a client has a relationship with a financial advisor or financial planner, it is often helpful to take a team approach to coordination of non-probate assets.⁵³⁷ Often, the financial advisor will have direct access to financial institutions and will be familiar with the forms and paperwork required.⁵³⁸ If the client consents, the attorney should communicate with the financial advisor so that the financial advisor can take an active role.⁵³⁹

D. Providing Clients with Tools to Coordinate Non-Probate Assets

Regardless of whether or not a client requests that the attorney assist with the active coordination of non-probate assets, the attorney should provide clients the necessary tools to coordinate non-probate assets on their own to the extent possible.⁵⁴⁰ After clients leave our offices, their assets seldom remain static.⁵⁴¹ For example, a client may acquire new life insurance policies, rollover an employer-sponsored retirement plan to an IRA, or inherit an IRA.⁵⁴² In those situations, it is helpful for clients to have a clear set of instructions regarding how to handle the paperwork involved in coordinating those assets with their estate plan.⁵⁴³

During the initial meeting and when drafts of estate planning documents are sent to our clients, we advise them that they should begin gathering beneficiary designation forms and checking accounts for survivorship designations.⁵⁴⁴ If the estate plan includes a revocable trust, we remind them that all non-probate assets will need to be transferred to the trust in order to avoid probate and ask for them to begin collecting documents such as deeds, partnership agreements, etc.⁵⁴⁵ When clients come to our office to sign their estate planning documents, we provide them with a memorandum regarding the coordination of non-probate assets with their estate plan.⁵⁴⁶ The memorandum contains some of the information set out in this Article, including what constitutes a non-probate asset, steps to follow, sample language to be used on beneficiary designation forms, and tips for troubleshooting issues that sometime arise in connection with changing the beneficiary designations.⁵⁴⁷ If necessary, included with the memorandum is a chart specific to the client showing recommended beneficiary designations.⁵⁴⁸ Charts such as these should not be generic, but rather should be tailored to meet each client's needs.⁵⁴⁹

We also provide a "Frequently Asked Questions" document regarding titling accounts which explains rights of survivorship, P.O.D. and T.O.D. designations, and their implications.⁵⁵⁰

Lastly, if the client's estate plan includes a revocable trust, a memorandum is provided regarding funding the trust, which includes information about how title should be taken, information about how to transfer assets, and requests that the client consult with us in certain situations to identify issues associated with the funding.⁵⁵¹

Providing these written recommendations and instructions to the client is the best practice for an estate planning attorney.⁵⁵² Although preparation of the written material and tailoring the material for each client takes time, it provides untold additional value, and our clients are always extremely appreciative of the effort.⁵⁵³

VII. POST-MORTEM REMEDIES IF NON-PROBATE ASSETS ARE NOT CORRECTLY COORDINATED

Hopefully, at a person's death, all of the person's non-probate assets will have been perfectly coordinated with the person's overall estate plan.⁵⁵⁴ However, many times, this will not be the case.⁵⁵⁵ If at a person's death, the person's non-probate assets have not been correctly coordinated with the estate plan, there are a few post-mortem actions that can be taken to remedy the situation.⁵⁵⁶

A. Scrutinize Account Agreements

If a multi-party account is at issue, the account agreement or signature card governing the account should be scrutinized.⁵⁵⁷ As mentioned above, although the Texas Estates Code provides a uniform account form, experience shows that many financial institutions do not use the specific language provided.⁵⁵⁸ As a result, the language on the account agreement or signature card may be insufficient to create a right of survivorship.⁵⁵⁹

If that is the case, the decedent's portion of the account may pass as part of the decedent's probate estate.⁵⁶⁰ The personal representative may contact the financial institution to collect the assets and explain to the proper representative of the financial institution (generally in the legal department) that the account agreement or signature card does not create a right of survivorship.⁵⁶¹ I have had several experiences with smaller, local banks, in which the banks have conceded that the language on their form was not sufficient to create a right of survivorship under Texas law and have acknowledged the estate's ownership.⁵⁶² However, some financial institutions are not as easy to reason with.⁵⁶³ In those circumstances, if the other party to the account understands the law and receives the decedent's portion of the account from the financial institution, then upon receipt that party may deliver the funds or assets to the personal representative of the estate as the proper owner.⁵⁶⁴

B. Consider Disclaimers

If a person is the proper recipient of a non-probate asset (as a result of a right of survivorship, beneficiary designation, or otherwise), the person may have an option to disclaim (i.e., renounce) the person's right to receive the property or any portion of the property.⁵⁶⁵

If an asset or any portion of an asset is disclaimed, it will pass as if the disclaiming party predeceased the decedent.⁵⁶⁶ Accordingly, before the attorney recommends a disclaimer, the attorney should make a determination regarding what would happen and who would receive the disclaimed asset as a result of the disclaimer.⁵⁶⁷ Successive disclaimers might need to be made by multiple parties if necessary to obtain the desired disposition of the property.⁵⁶⁸

A disclaimer is a complete renunciation of property, which in Texas must be made per Chapter 240 of the Texas Property Code in order to be valid.⁵⁶⁹ For the disclaimer to be a qualified disclaimer pursuant to federal law, the disclaimer must also be made in accordance with Section 2518 of the Internal Revenue Code.⁵⁷⁰ Prior to 2015, the Texas disclaimer rules were largely based on federal tax law.⁵⁷¹ However, in 2015, Texas adopted a version of the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, which replaced the prior disclaimer statutes in the Texas Estates Code and Texas Property Code.⁵⁷² The Texas disclaimer laws are now significantly different from the federal disclaimer laws, so each should be reviewed at the time of disclaimer to ensure full compliance with both.⁵⁷³

573. See id.

Texas Property Code Section 240.009 provides that to be effective, a disclaimer must:

1. Be in writing;
2. Declare the disclaimer;
3. Describe the interest or power disclaimed;
4. Be signed by the person making the disclaimer; and
5. Be delivered or filed in the manner provided by Subchapter C of Chapter 240.⁵⁷⁴

For a disclaimer to be qualified under Section 2518 of the Internal Revenue Code, the following requirements must be met:⁵⁷⁵

1. The disclaimer must be in writing.⁵⁷⁶
2. It must be received by the transferor of the interest, his legal representative, or the holder of the legal title to the property to which the interest relates not later than 9 months after the day on which the transfer creating the interest is made.⁵⁷⁷ If the disclaimant is receiving non-probate property as a result of a person's death, the date of the transfer creating the interest is generally the decedent's date of death.⁵⁷⁸
3. The disclaimant must not have previously accepted the interest or any of the benefits of the property.⁵⁷⁹
4. The disclaimed property must generally pass in a manner that the disclaiming party will not benefit from the property.⁵⁸⁰ An important exception to this rule, however, permits the surviving spouse to disclaim property and still retain benefits from a trust into which the property may pass.⁵⁸¹
5. The disclaimed property must pass without direction or control of the disclaiming party.⁵⁸² This requirement may prevent a disclaimant from serving as a trustee of any trust into which the assets are disclaimed, unless the trustee's powers are appropriately restricted.⁵⁸³ If the trust contains unduly broad powers, other family members or a professional trustee may serve as trustee.⁵⁸⁴ This restriction also prevents a trust beneficiary from retaining a power of appointment over the trust property.⁵⁸⁵

C. Equalization by Beneficiaries

A recipient of a non-probate asset may be altruistic enough to voluntarily distribute the proceeds of the asset among others if the recipient believes that was the decedent's intent.⁵⁸⁶ Similarly, if there are debts, expenses, or taxes payable by the estate, the recipient may desire to pay their "share."⁵⁸⁷ While the recipient's goodwill may be utilized to effectuate the decedent's intent, people who desire to take such equalizing actions should be aware of gift tax consequences that may arise as a result.⁵⁸⁸

If any amount is given outright to another person, it will be a gift from the original recipient for federal gift tax purposes.⁵⁸⁹ If the original recipient pays debts, expenses, or taxes that the recipient is not obligated to pay, the amount paid will be deemed a gift to the people from whose share the amounts should have been paid.⁵⁹⁰

The federal transfer tax system imposes a tax on the right to transfer assets by gift.⁵⁹¹ Annual gifts of up to $15,000 per donee can be made without any gift tax consequences and without the necessity to file a federal gift tax return.⁵⁹² This $15,000-per-donee amount is referred to as the "annual exclusion."⁵⁹³ However, if the amount given to any one donee is in excess of the annual exclusion, the donor will be required to file a federal gift tax return, and the amounts given in excess of the annual exclusion will reduce the person's lifetime gift tax exemption ($11.7 million for 2021), or if the lifetime gift tax exemption has been used, the amounts will be subject to gift tax with a top marginal rate of 40%.⁵⁹⁴

This is scheduled to increase to $16,000 in 2022.).

VIII. CONCLUSION

Our clients can achieve the best result when they coordinate their non-probate assets with their overall estate plan.⁵⁹⁵ An attorney advising clients in this area should be knowledgeable about the myriad of issues and considerations associated with non-probate assets and should be able to identify clients' non-probate assets and educate clients regarding those assets.⁵⁹⁶

Additionally, the attorney should put into place purposeful policies and practices in order to facilitate the collection of information about clients' non-probate assets, set clear guidelines regarding responsibilities for coordination of non-probate assets, and ensure best practices in the practical actions involved in the coordination of the non-probate assets if they are engaged to do so.⁵⁹⁷

If non-probate assets are not properly coordinated, some post-mortem actions can be taken to align the non-probate assets with the overall estate plan.⁵⁹⁸ However, these post-death fixes are not always available, and the best result will be achieved if the disposition of non-probate assets is carefully considered and coordinated with the estate plan at the outset.⁵⁹⁹
