What to Expect

I have now moved to doing newborn shoots in my home unless you request a lifestyle session in your own home. I am moving into doing more organic textured bright neutral photos and throw in a few different things in the mix. I do have some hats and headbands as well as different wrap fabrics to add that little pop of color. Textures seem to add a lot to a photo.

Clothing I suggest to keep things neutral, and if you have other children to add to the pictures then add that color into their wardrobe and we will pull a little something out of the wraps I have or something that catches your eye. You are more than welcome to bring any outfits you want if that is your preference. Dress in layers it gets about 75-76 degrees in the dedicated room!

Expect the full session to take at least 2-3 hours depending on baby. If they want to feed a lot then we stop and feed between changing wraps or background choices or whatever works. Do not have any specific expectations as sometimes we end up with whatever they allow us to do.

Bring an extra change of clothes incase we get brave and try a little nude baby holding, I expect baby to pee on things or have little accidents so don't panic. Bring lots of wipes you prefer, diapers and food for baby. Most of all bring a fun laid back attitude and relax!

I encourage you to try to exfoliate baby as best as you can for removing dry flakes, use lots of baby lotion or oil day of shoot this cuts down on time spent editing this out This is what takes me SO much time.

When to Book...

We will book a tentative week to watch for but it is just to give me an idea as far as due date. To get the best squishy, relaxed flexible baby poses it is best to try to get you in between 5-15 days after baby comes. I do not guarantee certain poses of course some babies have a slight preference to positions sometimes and do not either like being wrapped or do not like being on their tummy etc. So you just have to trust me and that we will figure it out as we go. We will get lots of great shots and I am always excited to see you! This just makes my heart so full when I am done and cannot wait to deliver the first couple sneaks.

I usually will take anywhere from 2-4 weeks from shoot to delivery. This all depends on time of year and how my other job affects the timeline. Please be patient!
