Yaletown

WHEN VANCOUVER BECAME the western terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1886, one of the first decisions Mayor MacLean and his council made was to offer to the CPR a 20-year exemption from taxes if they opted to build rail yards and repair facilities on the north shore of False Creek. As a result, the railway company agreed to move its machinery and employees from its former shops at Yale in the Fraser Canyon to the new site. Some of the railway employees at Yale loaded their homes onto flatcars and sent them to the new “Yaletown” in Vancouver. Many of the bachelor railroaders lived in rooming houses such as the Yaletown Hotel.

The railway workers built a roundhouse and other facilities on the new site for repairing the steam locomotives. The roundhouse enclosed a huge turntable with rail tracks that allowed train engines and other rail cars to be turned end for end for the return trip back east.

By 1900 an eight-block warehouse district had sprung up adjacent to the original Yaletown. Called New Yaletown, it consisted of companies receiving or shipping products by rail.

By the late 1970s much of the 175-acre CPR rail yard site on False Creek had become an industrial wasteland. It was during this period that several people came up with the idea of utilizing the area for a world exposition to celebrate Vancouver’s 100th birthday. The provincial government purchased the site from the CPR in the early 1980s and began to prepare it for Expo 86, the theme of which was transportation and communication. Prince Charles, Princess Diana, and Prime Minister Brian Mulroney opened the fair on 2 May 1986.

In 1988 most of the Expo site was sold to Concord Pacific Development Corporation, whose primary shareholder was Hong Kong billionaire Li Ka-Shing. The sale became very controversial when the purchasers complained that the site was contaminated and required a massive cleanup. In less than 25 years the Chinese development company has erected several high-rises, making the area one of the most densely populated and sought-after places to live in all of Canada.
