

If

If god were walking around

If god were walking around one day, and thought about it

If god were walking around one day, and thought about it: how sad it is what humans have done to this planet and each other, he would be ashamed at what he had done. The dinosaurs could not have gotten off this planet, so they had a built-in ending date when our sun eats our planet in a very, very, very long far-away time. Humans are starting to look like they might/can maybe live in another place eventually. So, we can actually be the first species that won't become myth. This/our history will/could be the first species we know of that would have some record of its existence, somewhere in the universe, until the universe decides what it wants to do now. That is amazing.

Now take a look back at us. Garbage. Killing species left and right. Hey, ASSHOLES, if you can live elsewhere, SO CAN WE!!!

We can be a real-life noah's ark.

Uh,...no.

I don't want to spread this. Do you?

We may as well do ourselves in.

But, I can see some glimmer of hope. And I can see that most human misery (and misery loves company)—we just had to keep going until we got to this point. $E=mc^2$, Albert Einstein, beautiful. Harness the power of the sun! He helped create a bomb—then spent the rest of his life protesting its use. But, we wouldn't be able to stay in space without it.

So many human lives lost in misery. The plant and animal world wants to live, too, but they can't really help us. It IS up to us.
