

Coronavirus Pandemic and Healthcare

Hospitals taking money from the $2 trillion stimulus bill will have to agree not to send surprise medical bills to patients treated for COVID-19.

Surprise bills typically happen when a patient with health insurance gets treated at an out of network emergency room, or when an out of network doctor assists with a hospital procedure.

This administration is committed to ensuring all Americans are not surprised by the cost related to testing and treatment they need for COVID 19

Hospitals that accept the grants will have to certify that they won't try to collect more money than the patient would have otherwise owed if the medical attention had been provided in network.
