A Ghost, a Donkey, and a Very Chick-Ranch Halloween

Some people put up Halloween decorations and photograph the finished result.

At Chick-Ranch, we get Pedro.

There he is beside a ghost hanging from a tree, wearing his red bandana and looking straight at the camera. The ghost has the flowing white outfit. Pedro has the ears. It’s a competitive photo.

We’ll let you decide who wore it better.

The decorating committee has questions

A pair of skeleton flamingos has also taken up residence on the lawn. They’re holding their poses beautifully, which should make them easy to photograph. Yet somehow, our favorite Halloween picture is still the one with the donkey.

Look closely at Pedro’s expression. Is he inspecting our work? Waiting for attention? Wondering why someone hung perfectly good fabric from a tree?

We didn’t get an official statement.

PEDRO & THE GHOST

One has a flowing white outfit.
One has the ears.
It’s a competitive photo.

Who wore it better?

For anyone who hasn’t met him, Pedro is our painted miniature donkey, with a playful streak. Pedro also appreciates a good scratch and an audience - so perhaps finding himself in our Halloween photos was inevitable.

A little glimpse of life here

This is the kind of moment we love sharing from Chick-Ranch. The decorations come out, the season changes, and an ordinary afternoon gives us a photo we’ll keep smiling at long after Halloween.

There’s plenty of work behind caring for the animals. There’s also room to stop, take a picture, and appreciate the little characters who make this place home.

This week, that character happens to be wearing a red bandana beside a ghost.

Happy Halloween from Chick-Ranch in Temecula.

Now help us caption Pedro’s photo.

We’re pretty sure you can do better than “Boo.”