I AM WOMAN

WILL YOUR GARDEN REAP A HARVEST?

A living garden produces plants without planting new seed such as asparagus, onions, garlic, strawberries, sweet potatoes, perennials, shrubs, and vines. Living gardens strategically maps a continued end. The placement of items must be intentional even though the bloom yearly attention must be given to produce an expected harvest.

Living a life that outlives you must be more than remembrance of a pretty smile or character.

The attribute of a living garden includes:

1. Strength to withstand or weather a storm.
2. Perseverance to recognize the storm may blow my seed into another yard so I must be intentional of what I plant.
3. The ability to laugh at myself instead of becoming discouraged and quitting.
4. Willfully taking risks with confidence and courage.

To plant this garden, it requires preparation of the ground, therefore our lives must have a firm determined foundation. It requires removing barriers that would cripple the foundation; in other words, our foundation must be forward thinking, "my foundation must be able to stand against the storm of scattering my seeds. "

Inheritance of money and material things will only benefit the family however my garden of strength, perseverance, laughter, and boldness will take root in everyone who meets my living garden! It is important to remember a life lived is to be an example to those left behind be it family, friend, or foe.
