COMICS

YOUNGBLOOD #1

A few years ago, my Dad showed me the first issue of the first volume of Youngblood (from 1992). To me that issue was awesome, the colors that pop straight off the page, the classic 90's line work, and Rob Liefeld's pencils. Now, about 30 years since the release of that book, it's been rebooted. This comic is a great way to reboot a series that some people may have forgotten about. It drops you right in the beginning of a fight while introducing each character and showing off their abilities - the perfect little refresher. The art in this issue showcases that classic Liefeld-look while incorporating modern colors and techniques. Reading this comic I felt about the same amount of awe and admiration as I felt reading that very first issue from 1992. My final ranking out of ten would be a 8.7/10.

MOVIES

FRANKENSTEIN

Wow. This movie was fantastic, also my introduction to Guillermo Del Toro's style. The things that stood out to me most were the cinematography and the costume/set design. The colors really reflected the vibe of each character and the mood of the scene, making the important parts of the film all the more impactful. I think the way both Frankenstein and his creature were written was incredible, not to mention Oscar Isaac and Jacob Elordi's performances of the characters. The soundtrack also played a big role in setting the mood for certain scenes - the suspense during the opening scene was crazy. Also, there were times where I was genuinely scared! Overall I give this movie a 9/10 (I only really had one gripe, but for the sake of spoilers I won't say anything)...

SHOWS

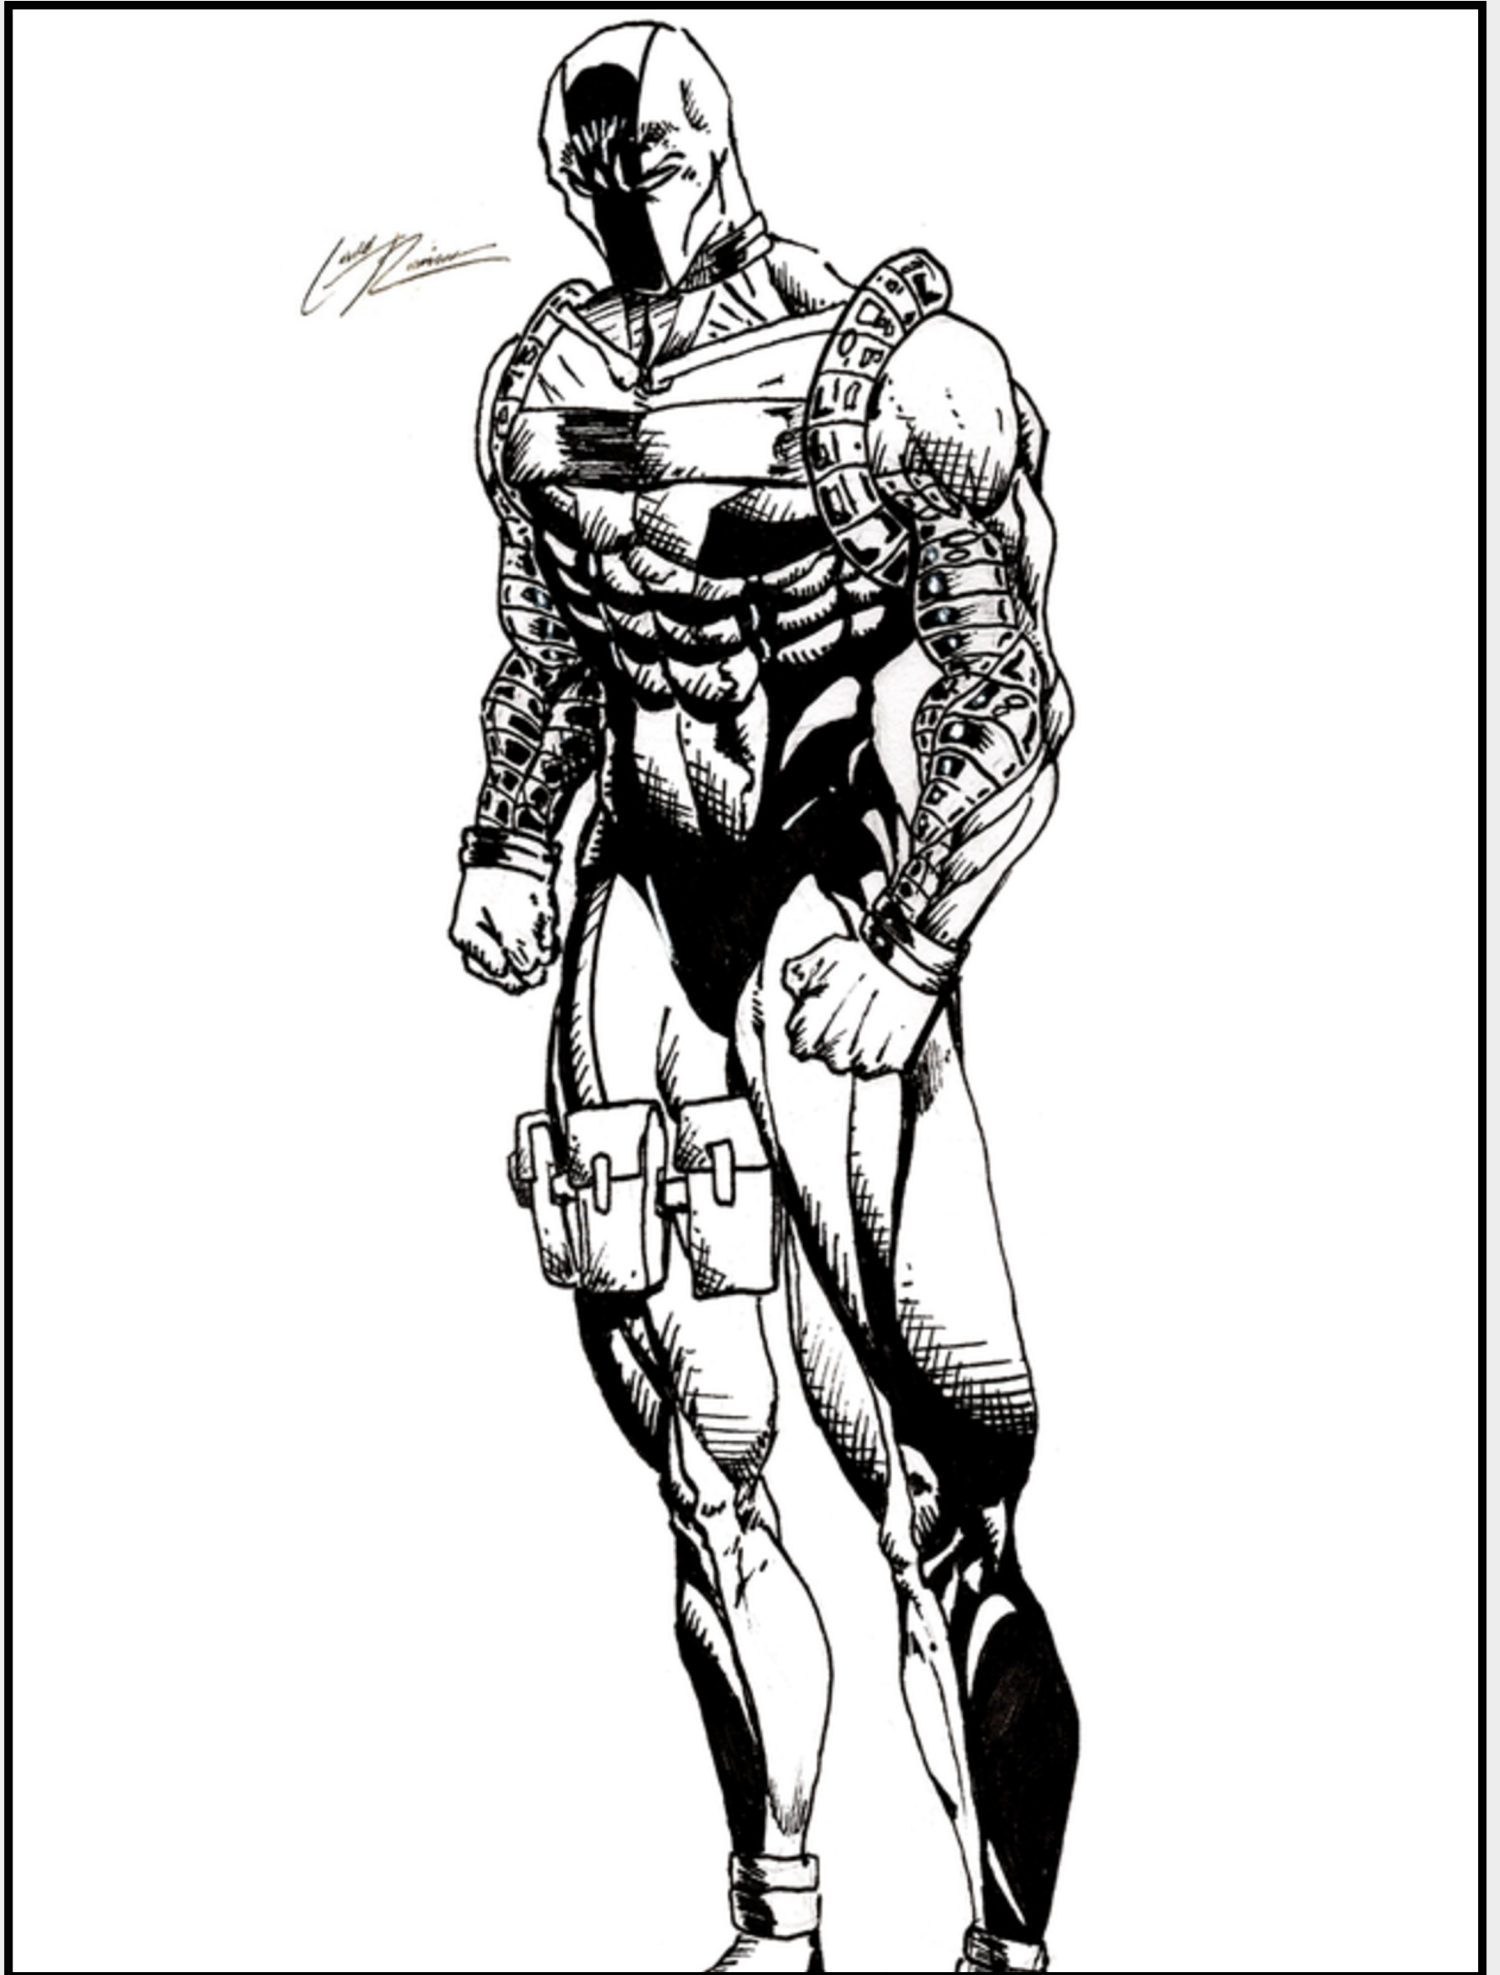

MARVEL ZOMBIES

This show was great, and arguably one of the best cartoons to release since X-Men '97. The zombie episode from What If is definitely top 3 in the entire show, so when a whole series in that same style came out, I was pretty hyped. What really got me interested was Blade as Moon Knight. Two of some of the coolest Marvel characters out there fused into one guy, man don't get me started! The combat in this show was great and felt like a real coordinated sequence. I give this show a solid 8/10.

SKETCH OF THE MONTH

FAN ART

IMAGE-DIEHARD

This month I chose to draw Diehard from Youngblood. I drew Diehard not only because he is easily the best character from Youngblood in my opinion, but because he's always a blast to draw and in honor of Youngblood's reboot this month I thought it was fitting.
