Twergi Collection Ettore Sottsass Corkscrew

CORKSCREW IN BEECH-WOOD AND STAINLESS
STEEL

CODE ES17 LIST $ 130

This collection of wooden objects pays tribute to Italy's craftsman wood turners and the ancient tradition of woodturning typical to the region where Alessi is based. The name "twergi" also means "elf", a reference here to how they were thought to have taught men how to work with wood. Repurposing some of Sottsass' most interesting designs and adding new and surprising color combinations, these small colorful objects can be used at the table and left out as little sculptures on kitchen counters.

Created as part of the F.F.F. (Family Follows Fiction) metaproject, an operation in the early 1990s that aimed to explore the affective structure of shapes and objects, starting from the idea of reproducing the object creation process followed by children and primitive cultures. The "Diabolix" bottle opener was a great success, perhaps because it married the creative energies of Centro Studi Alessi with a traditional object from the Alessi catalogue.

"Bulla" is the result of reflection into the adoption of natural shapes that do not immediately reveal their origins but which, even without explicitly announcing it, may have a purpose. Bulla is like a smooth shell, egg-shaped with a long opening: the bottle opener is compact, its smooth polished surface pleasing to the touch. The black leather cord completes the object and allows "Bulla" to be hung up in the kitchen or enables you to take it wherever you go, even on a beach among the shells.

LUIGI MASSONI

Luigi Massoni (Milan, 1930) designer and architect, was responsible for the A&D in Cermenate (Como). After a period of training at the Collettivo di Architettura in Milan and his first professional experiences between 1953 and 1955, he began his design career by making the cocktail shaker (1957, with Carlo Mazzeri) and the Serie 5 containers, which are still in production, for Alessi. In 1959, by taking into partnership a group of furniture manufacturers, he became the organiser of the foundation of Mobilia and that same year he also joined Boffi as a production coordinator and designer, creating some of the first ever modular systems for the home and kitchen.

CARLO MAZZERI

Born in Oleggio (Novara) in 1927, Carlo Mazzeri graduated in architecture from the Istituto Universitario di Architettura in Venice in 1956. In 1957 he designed the cocktail shaker 870 with Luigi Massoni, which is still in production and can be found in bars worldwide. In the '60s and '70s with Anselmo Vitale he designed a complete collection of objects for Alessi for use in the hotel industry. He was involved in civil and industrial construction, responsible among other things for the Alessi plant in Omegna (1960-1971). In 1973 he opened a studio of architecture in Novara, becoming involved in civil architecture, restoration and town planning.

Boston Cocktail Shaker

AMERICAN OR "BOSTON" SHAKER IN 18/10 STAINLESS STEEL.

CODE 5050 | LIST $ 200

The fruit of extensive research by Alberto Gozzi on professional bar & wine utensils, this is considered the most professional type of shaker. It has two parts which fit perfectly into each other: the steel part is made especially flexible by a special cold-working operation. The steel beaker can also be used as a mixing glass, with the 5054 bar stirrer.

DESIGNERS

LUIGI MASSONI

Luigi Massoni (Milan, 1930) designer and architect, was responsible for the A&D in Cermenate (Como). After a period of training at the Collettivo di Architettura in Milan and his first professional experiences between 1953 and 1955, he began his design career by making the cocktail shaker (1957, with Carlo Mazzeri) and the Serie 5 containers, which are still in production, for Alessi. In 1959, by taking into partnership a group of furniture manufacturers, he became the organiser of the foundation of Mobilia and that same year he also joined Boffi as a production coordinator and designer, creating some of the first ever modular systems for the home and kitchen.

CARLO MAZZERI

Born in Oleggio (Novara) in 1927, Carlo Mazzeri graduated in architecture from the Istituto Universitario di Architettura in Venice in 1956. In 1957 he designed the cocktail shaker 870 with Luigi Massoni, which is still in production and can be found in bars worldwide. In the '60s and '70s with Anselmo Vitale he designed a complete collection of objects for Alessi for use in the hotel industry. He was involved in civil and industrial construction, responsible among other things for the Alessi plant in Omegna (1960-1971). In 1973 he opened a studio of architecture in Novara, becoming involved in civil architecture, restoration and town planning.

UFFICIO TECNICO ALESSI

Ufficio Tecnico Alessi, also known as the Alessi Technical Office, originated as a small product development workshop established 1921 by Giovanni Alessi and his brother and known for its impeccable quality and craftsmanship of household items and tableware in materials such as copper, brass, and nickel silver. During the 1970's Ufficio Tecnico Alessi began to explore partnerships with external designers, which marked a gradual shift away from product design and specializing now exclusively in the development of projects.
