OUR DESPERATE HOUR

I offer my thanks to many who helped me craft this novel. First and foremost, my first reader, Susan Piechowski, MD, who tolerated my many hours of research (including two WWI battlefield tours), writing, and revision of this and my other novels and reviewed and proofread each revision. Thank you, Sue.

This novel could not have been written without heavy reliance on historical source material and historians. Many people helped me with review, advice, and map permissions. These include George Clark, who reviewed the original manuscript that I later split in half. This novel is the first half and An American Nurse in Paris is the second. I used several of Mr. Clark's maps with his permission. Additional historical review and advice was provided by Col. William White, USMC (RET), SSGT Steven Girard USA (RET), Andre Sobocinski, Col William Anderson, USMC (RET), and Lt. Col. Peter Owen, USMC (RET). I took two WWI battlefield tours with Military Historical Tours, the first led by William White and Gary Andrejak, and the second led by White's son, James, and Steven Girard. Historian Gilles Lagin led our tour of Belleau Wood and provided great depth of understanding of the battle and the people who fought it. The opportunity to have my boots on the ground in the battlefield was moving and critical to an understanding of the terrain. The opportunity to be present for the 100th anniversary Memorial Day Service at the Aisne-Marne American Cemetery where the Americans who perished in the Battle of Belleau Wood are buried was moving.

I thank the following beta readers who helped shape this novel: Henry "Buz" Page, Paul Zimmerman, Joe Kullman, Ray Rigel, Patti Draude, Spencer Millimen, Chuck de Maillé, Rob Fraser, Major Matthew Andrews USMC, SSGT Michael Andrews, USMC (RET). My critique group, Wordpandners, was invaluable in the process of creating this novel: Rex Griffin, Marilee Aufdenkamp, and Mike Torreano, and Scott Hibbard. My thanks also to Jenny Quinlan and Aaron Redfern at Historical Editorial for their developmental and copyediting work; their input was of great help.
