About The Artist

- Julia O'Malley-Keyes stands as a beacon in the realm of contemporary realism, captivating audiences with her evocative and meticulously detailed compositions. Her journey as an artist is marked by a profound dedication to capturing the essence of the human experience with unyielding authenticity. She breathes life into her subjects through her mastery of the brush, rendering them with a depth and emotional resonance that transcends mere representation.
- Born into a family that applauded everything creative and philanthropic, O'Malley-Keyes was immersed in a world of creativity from a young age. Drawing inspiration from her surroundings, extensive travel abroad, and personal experiences, she honed her craft through years of diligent practice and exploration that included study at a renowned fine art atelier in Paris, a period of study with John Stobart to hone her skills while painting detailed classic marine settings, with Henry Hensche to sharpen her skills regarding color theory, membership with The Art Students League of NYC; apprenticeships with Sun Kui, a master of portraiture, in Shanghai, China; and many more accomplished masters. All of these experiences culminated in her commitment to realism, evident in every stroke of her brush, as she meticulously captures the intricacies of form, light, and shadow, imbuing her works with a sense of immediacy and presence.
- What sets O'Malley-Keyes apart in the world of contemporary realism is her unwavering commitment to authenticity. Rather than merely replicating the physical world, she seeks to capture the essence of her subjects, delving beneath the surface to reveal the raw emotions and inner complexities that define them. From depicting a delicate ballerina, a heart-pumping classic marine regatta, or the beauty of the landscape that surrounds her home and studio on Cape Cod, her works resonate with a profound sense of humanity and vulnerability. She explores themes of love, joy, the beauty of nature, and the resilience of a hard-working crew fighting for their place in the sun during a classic sailing regatta. Her art mirrors the myriad facets of the human condition.
- Central to O'Malley-Keyes' artistic philosophy is the belief that art has the power to transcend boundaries and unite people across cultures and generations. Through her work, she seeks to foster empathy and connection, inviting viewers to see the world through the eyes of others and to recognize the shared humanity that binds us all together. In an increasingly fragmented and polarized world, her art serves as a reminder of our common humanity and the universal truths that unite us all. Throughout her career, O'Malley-Keyes has garnered widespread acclaim for her work, with exhibitions in galleries and museums around the world. Her art has been praised for its technical mastery, emotional depth, and profound ability to resonate with viewers on a visceral level. She has said, “My goal is to place you in the painting; I want you to be able to feel the sand between your toes in a beach painting; I want you to genuinely feel the incredible rush of enthusiasm felt by the crew as they maneuver 130 feet of classic sailboat towards the finish line or the profound calm of a charming harbor. If you can feel that you are there, a part of the painting, and it brings you happiness, I’ve accomplished what I’ve set out to do”.

About The Artist

Beyond mere aesthetics, her work has sparked meaningful conversations about the nature of reality, perception, and the power of art to positively transform lives. O'Malley-Keyes' commitment to giving back to her community extends far beyond her artistic endeavors. She actively engages in local and national charitable initiatives to address areas of need. Ultimately, Julia O'Malley-Keyes' involvement in local and national charitable areas of need, her willingness to help anyone who genuinely needs someone to talk to or emotional and financial assistance, are what makes her tick, and these are a testament to her belief in the transformative power of kindness and the importance of giving back to those in need. Through her tireless dedication and unwavering commitment to making a difference, she inspires others to join her in creating a more compassionate world for all. In all of her correspondence, you will see a paragraph that sums up her feelings about fame, personal wealth, and her aversion to the self-centered: "Life is short, and the only thing that matters is kindness. Money, fame, and social standing are worthless. It is showing kindness to everyone you meet, that is the only thing that makes life worth living!"

Primates are endlessly amusing creatures, often behaving in ways that are strikingly similar to humans, making them both entertaining and fascinating to observe. From chimpanzees playing pranks on each other to orangutans using tools in surprisingly clever ways, their antics reveal a deep intelligence and a sense of humor that feels almost human. They laugh, tease, sulk, and even throw tantrums, much like children, reminding us just how closely related we are. On a lazy summer day in Chatham the serene charm of the beachfront home of my dear friend Harry, offers a perfect retreat into tranquility. The sun, a gentle golden orb, casts its warm embrace over the quaint Cape Cod scenery, painting the sky in hues of soft blues as it rises. The rhythmic lull of the Atlantic's waves breaking on the shore becomes a soothing soundtrack, mingling with the light rustle of sea oats dancing in the mild breeze. The air, salty and fresh, fills the cozy beachfront dock where I found myself napping, a book forgotten on my lap, ensnared instead by the mesmerizing expanse of blue that stretches beyond the horizon.

As the day moves from sunrise, to noon-time sun-bathing, the beach comes alive in a lazy symphony of sights and sounds. Children's laughter echoes as they build sandcastles, their imaginations as boundless as the ocean before them. Families and friends gather for leisurely seaside picnics, their conversations mingling with the call of seagulls. In the evening, the same dockside repose offers up the glories of the setting sun and transforms the sky into a canvas of fiery oranges and purples, signaling the day's end in a spectacular display. In this moment, the beachfront home in Chatham stands as a haven of peace, a place where time slows and the heart finds joy in the simple pleasures of a summer day on Cape Cod.

“ THE SPORT OF KINGS ”

30X30 OIL ON LINEN $15,900 UNFRAMED

My Father Nial Edward O'Malley-Keyes, as his Father Colonel Middleton Joseph O'Malley-Keyes had done before him, spent his summers at Biarritz and Chantilly galloping up and down a polo field. The fellows in my family were great supporters of Polo and segments of my family to this day remain devoted players of this exciting game. I had in my possession my Father's silver polo cups that are a unique reminder of a completely different time in our family history when the majority of my family lived in Europe. A few years ago, I sent these cherished family heirlooms to my older brother, Middleton Edward O'Malley-Keyes, for safe keeping. "Middie" will be passing these heirlooms down to the next generation of polo enthusiasts.

A Bit of Polo History

Polo, often referred to as the "sport of kings," derives its regal nickname from its deep association with royalty, aristocracy, and elite culture throughout history. Originating over 2,000 years ago in Central Asia, polo was initially played as a training game for warriors, reflecting its roots in power, strategy, and competition. Over time, the game became a favorite pastime of Persian kings, symbolizing both their physical prowess and their ability to command and lead. The lavish courts of Persia helped elevate polo to an aristocratic status, setting the foundation for its enduring royal connotations.

Today, polo retains its image as a prestigious sport. Events like the Veuve Clicquot Polo Classic and the British Polo Day showcase the sport's modern connection to high fashion, exclusivity, and the global elite. While it has evolved to become more accessible in certain parts of the world, the game's historical ties to royalty and aristocracy persist, lending it an air of sophistication and making it synonymous with the grandeur of kings and queens. This enduring legacy ensures that polo remains one of the most iconic symbols of regal elegance in sports.

Mute swans are renowned for their graceful beauty and their strong, enduring pair bonds, often symbolizing love and fidelity. These majestic birds, native to Europe and Asia but now found worldwide, are largely monogamous, with pairs typically staying together for life. Their lifelong partnership is not just a romantic notion but a practical adaptation for raising their young successfully. By remaining together year after year, mute swan pairs build on their cooperative behaviors, refining their ability to protect their nests, raise their cygnets, and navigate their shared environment. The process of pair bonding among mute swans begins with elaborate courtship rituals that include synchronized swimming, head bobbing, and mutual preening. Once bonded, the pair works closely together, especially during the breeding season. The female lays eggs in a carefully constructed nest, usually built in secluded areas near water, while the male stands guard to fend off potential predators or intruders. Their teamwork extends to raising their cygnets, with both parents playing active roles in guiding, feeding, and protecting their young until they are independent. This cooperative parenting strategy increases the chances of their offspring's survival, reinforcing the evolutionary advantage of their lifelong bond. The commitment mute swans display in their relationships has made them a powerful cultural symbol of loyalty and devotion across many societies. Their enduring partnerships not only showcase their remarkable behavioral adaptations but also remind us of the beauty and strength found in enduring connections.

Cape Cod's beaches, renowned for their stunning landscapes and serene atmosphere, are quintessentially adorned with an often overlooked yet iconic feature: snow fences. These wooden barriers, standing as silent sentinels along the shoreline, are not merely functional; they are deeply woven into the fabric of Cape Cod's coastal identity. Crafted from slats of wood held together by wire, these fences run parallel to the water's edge, their weathered appearance telling tales of seasons passed. They serve a critical role in preserving the beach's natural beauty, capturing blowing sand to prevent erosion and help form dunes that protect the inland areas from storm surges. As the seasons change, the fences are blanketed in snow, creating a mesmerizing contrast against the winter's stark yet beautiful landscape, symbolizing the enduring relationship between nature and the communities that call Cape Cod home.

Beyond their practical purpose, Cape Cod's snow fences have evolved into a beloved aesthetic feature, capturing the imagination of photographers, painters, and tourists alike. The rhythmic pattern of the fences against the backdrop of the Atlantic, whether under the golden hues of a summer sunset or the serene white of winter snow, offers a visual harmony that complements the coastline's natural beauty. This iconic imagery has become emblematic of the Cape's charm, embodying the spirit of preservation and respect for the environment. The fences stand not just as barriers against the elements but as a testament to the balance between human intervention and nature's majesty, making them an inseparable part of the Cape Cod beach experience.

My Father gave me my first bottle of Joy-Jean Patou for my 13th birthday. I have been wearing this scent for the last 63 years.

The perfume Eau de Joy by Jean Patou first made an appearance in the very Chic parlors of Parisian social denizens and holds a distinguished place in the annals of fragrance history, embodying the spirit of luxury and the pursuit of perfection that marked the early 20th century. Created by the French couturier Jean Patou, Eau de Joy was crafted as an antithesis to the economic gloom of the Great Depression, offering a scent that symbolized opulence and joy in a time of widespread austerity. Jean Patou, already renowned for his contributions to haute couture, sought to create a perfume that captured the essence of femininity and joy, using an unprecedented concentration of precious ingredients. This bold endeavor resulted in an extravagant and revolutionary fragrance characterized by an intricate composition of jasmine, rose, and other floral notes meticulously blended to evoke a sense of cheerfulness and sophistication.

"BELLES VOILES"

The story began on 9/29/1981, with a bet intended to defend a sailor's honor between Pride, Dick Jason's American Swan 44, and Ikra, the 12MJ1 skippered by Frenchman Jean Laurain. The challenge could not have been simpler: starting at the foot of the Tour du Portalet, in front of Saint-Tropez village, turning around the shallow-water Nioulargo mark (or 'offshore nest' in Provencal), and finishing at Pampelonne beach in front of the event orchestrator Patrice de Colmont's "Club 55", for lunch under the shade of the Tamaris trees. Ikra came in ahead of Pride, a challenge that gave life to the "Club 55 Cup". From this improbable duel was born a unique event. This special gathering has been racing for 40 years and sees the smallest racing boats with the prestigious Maxi yachts, ultra-sophisticated prototypes with famous classic yachts joining in essence with the rich Tropezian maritime past. The incomparable and inimitable Nioulargue would continue to exist for fifteen years, mixing world-famous sailors with teams of all levels, world champions, offshore sailors, Olympic medalists, and America's Cup winners with royalty, and celebrities who remained incognito and at ease. Once this nautical jousting was concluded, the nights were eternalized by boules competitions, anchorages, and other festivities oftentimes spontaneously improvised on the dock, in the Place des Lices and thereabouts. Within the continuum of this conviviality bolstered by good sportsmanship, each year, the Nioulargue would continue to surprise with a stroke of brilliance in the vision of the Maxis, the J Class, the three-masters, the schooners, and the gaff cutters, alongside the futuristic Wallys. After many years of success and recognition, the sixteenth edition saw tragedy following the collision between the schooner Mariette and the 6M JI Taos Brett IV. The event was put on hold until 1999, when, under the impetus of the Société Nautique de Saint-Tropez, the Voiles de Saint-Tropez was born.

"BEST FRIENDS"

$29,500 FRAMED

As much as I love creating paintings of the ocean, sailing, and the New England coastline, I am equally captivated and inspired by the realm of figurative painting, particularly with a focus on dance. The two young dancers portrayed in this painting share a deep bond, having danced together since their early childhood years. With unwavering commitment and dedication, these inseparable friends have strived to pave their path toward a successful career in the highly competitive world of dance. Their shared passion for the art and their invaluable friendship serves as a source of inspiration, reflecting the beauty of human connection and artistry in motion.

Their hard work and love for the art form have shaped a special bond between these two young dancers that gives them the affection and support they'll need to excel in their chosen expression of art. As I spent hour after hour creating sketches and oil studies of them in different positions, I was struck by their patience and help with deciding which of the many studies would be used for the final painting. Towards the end of a very long day, I noticed a moment of true friendship when the young girl that you see standing in this painting put her hand on the shoulder of her best friend as if to assure her that everything was going to be alright. This sweet gesture between these two young dancers was exactly the inspiration that I needed to create a lovely composition that would never have occurred without their help.

This painting has been in and out of my art gallery as I have had trouble letting go of this painting in particular. One moment, I think that I am a working artist and need to sell all of my paintings, and the next moment, I cannot bear to part with the painting and memory of my time spent with these two amazing youngsters. For the time being, "Best Friends" 30x36 Oil on Linen, is in Rhode Island, but if history is any gauge, and if I don't find the perfect individual to collect this painting that I am so emotionally attached to, "Best Friends" may find it's way back into my private collection, once again.

"HERMANAS DE POLLERA"

28X40 OIL ON LINEN

$19,500 UNFRAMED

The Panama Canal Authority commissioned me to create fifteen paintings of Panama's national dance form for their corporate offices in Panama City. It took me nearly five years to complete these paintings. The Pollera, a traditional dance of Panama, is a vibrant expression of the country's cultural heritage and artistic spirit. Named after the iconic dress worn by the dancers, the Pollera represents centuries of tradition rooted in Spanish colonial influences. The dance is characterized by graceful, flowing movements that emphasize the beauty and intricate design of the Pollera dress. Performed during festivals, national celebrations, and folkloric events, it symbolizes Panamanian pride and is a testament to the country's rich cultural diversity. Central to the Pollera dance is the ornate dress from which it derives its name. Made of fine white cotton or linen, the dress is lavishly embroidered with colorful floral or geometric designs. The ensemble includes intricate accessories such as gold jewelry, elaborate hairpieces called Tembleques, and shimmering shawls. Each detail of the Pollera dress is imbued with cultural significance, and the craftsmanship involved in creating these garments often takes months. The flowing skirt plays a pivotal role in the dance, as the performers elegantly sway and twirl, creating mesmerizing patterns of movement. The choreography of the Pollera dance reflects a delicate balance of formality and joy. Dancers move in pairs, with men often wearing traditional white shirts and straw hats while women gracefully manipulate their skirts to accentuate the rhythm of the accompanying music. The dance is deeply symbolic, often portraying themes of courtship, celebration, and community. The interplay between the dancers and the infectious melodies of instruments like the tamborito drum, maracas, and accordion creates an atmosphere of festivity.

"CLAIRE IN PINK"

This painting of my dear friend Claire, with whom I have had a deep and abiding friendship since she started her professional dance career, was a labor of love. I have painted Claire many times and it is always a pleasure to spend the long hours required to create the numerous paintings of her that I have created over the years. One of my paintings of her hangs in the halls of the School of The Connecticut Ballet. Claire's successes have been highlighted on numerous occasions, and she has published her third well received book about her professional career, "Dance: A Story of Magic, Destiny and Fame", and even has her own YouTube channel.

Claire's success is not confined to the United States; she has also toured around the world and has performed for royalty in many different countries across Europe, the Middle East and Asia. This deeply kind and talented young woman has taught masterclasses in many of the finest international dance schools in the world including the Paris Opera Ballet School, France, Vaganova School, St. Petersburg, Russia, The Royal Ballet School, London, England, and the acclaimed Juilliard School of Dance, New York, to name just a few.

Her legacy is still going strong. After spending much of her career working with major dance troupes, and teaching the next generation of prima ballerinas, she's now applying her skills and knowledge as a highly sought after consultant for theater productions and television.

Claire's career is an example of success and dedication. She has committed her life and every bit of her considerable energies to dance. Her successes serve as an inspiring example of the dedication and resilience needed to succeed in this industry. I first met Claire when she was a prima ballerina with the Connecticut Ballet, and it was friendship at first sight as I adore ballet and Claire who is an avid collector of fine art, became a collector of my work. This amazingly talented dancer may also be seen in many Broadway productions in New York City. She is a lovely young woman, a dear and greatly appreciated friend who is as light as a feather, as sweet as sugar and brings kindness to an artform!
