

Nick Buell

Provider (Paraprofessional)

Nick wants people to know that there is way through it, because he has been through it – hitting bottom many times and getting back on his feet from nothing. Nick experienced significant trauma as both a child and adult and eventually learned to overcome these obstacles. It took Nick time to get there, and he went through years of substance use before he was ready to change. He has now had multiple years of recovery and is excited to help others through that process.

Nick has found that keeping active is a key to his recovery. Two of his passions are weightlifting and Brazilian Jiu Jitsu. Yet, the outdoors is where Nick calls home, whether you find him fishing (summer or winter), hunting, disc golfing, biking, hiking, camping, and more.

Nick has worked in a wide variety of construction jobs, including road construction, welding, concrete, and framing. He believes “idle hands are the devil’s workshop” and enjoys teaching trade-related skills at a basic level.

Nick’s goal is to empower others to find their own unique ways to recover. He believes everyone’s recovery is different and supporting them on their journey is his main goal. Nick has a passion for working with male youth because he knows how defining those years can be. He wants to teach them that they are not alone on their journey. Because of his own background with recovery, he has the ability to say, “You can do it.” He strives to bring out the positive in every situation so that others can learn to do so as well.

In his spare time, Nick enjoys the company of his 2 stepchildren who are elementary age, his partner, and their dog Oliver.
