Tennessee BCM students register SBC messengers

Special to Baptist and Reflector

SAN ANTONIO — The 8,618 registered messengers to the Southern Baptist Convention here June 12-13 were greeted with true southern hospitality.

A team of Baptist Collegiate Ministry students from Tennessee, Georgia, and Texas greeted messengers at the registration desk with southern charm and warm smiles.

SBC registration secretary Jim Wells, a director of missions from the Ozarks in Missouri, has requested the services of college students involved in Baptist Collegiate Ministry for the past three years at the Southern Baptist Convention. And in each of those years, a team of Tennessee BCM students has been the anchor team.

BAPTIST COLLEGIATE MINISTRY students from Tennessee and other states served on the registration team for the 2007 Southern Baptist Convention annual meeting held June 12-13 in San Antonio. Team members met several prominent Baptist leaders including former SBC president Charles Stanley of Atlanta. Students, from left, are, sitting, Hailey Enochs and Tina Gould; standing, Ericka Pennington, Kellianne Hardee, Krista Halliburton, David Houser, Heather Burgess, and Nikki Bruley.

Not only did the team of students provide a valuable service to messengers at the registration desk, but the convention experience was a learning opportunity for the collegians.

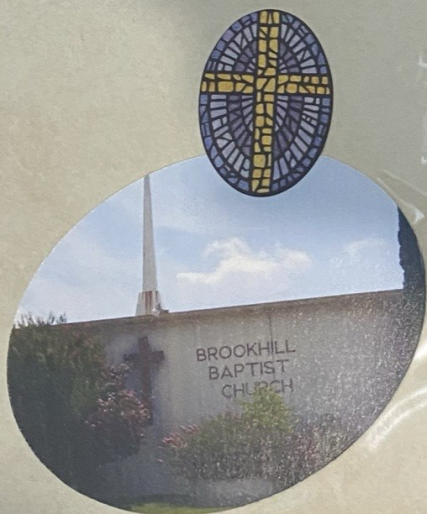

"The BCM students are so pleasant, they smile and talk with the messengers to the convention, and make everyone feel right at home. They work hard and get everyone registered very efficiently," Wells said. "We are excited to have the students as part of our Southern Baptist Convention team."

Three years ago, when the convention met in Nashville, Wells met Stan Cavness, BCM campus minister at Dyersburg State Community College in Dyersburg.

Cavness had arranged through the local arrangement committee in Nashville to bring a group of students as volunteers to help wherever they were needed at the convention. Extra help was needed at the registration desk and it became obvious immediately that college students were not only proficient on the computers at the registration desk, but they were friendly and provided a positive energy at an important first stop for the messengers who entered the convention venue.

"One of my personal goals as a campus minister is to teach students how to be a leader in their local church," Cavness said.

 "Through our BCM we have students who want to serve in their local church. The best way for students to learn ... is to do!"

With the success of the students working registration in Nashville, Wells requested Cavness make an attempt to gather more students to handle the entire registration process in North Carolina the next year.

"This was a good opportunity for students to serve at the convention and learn more about how our Southern Baptist Convention operates ... and it also helped us showcase the fact that students are capable of being in leadership positions ... they just need someone to give them an opportunity to serve," Cavness said.

STAN CAVNESS, left, Baptist Collegiate Ministry campus minister at Dyersburg State Community College, Dyersburg, looks over registration information with Andrew Wright, a student at Union University, Jackson, and youth minister at Harvest Baptist Church, Dyersburg.

Cavness went to Bill Choate, Tennessee Baptist Convention Collegiate Ministries group leader and presented the request. Choate and Stacy Murphree, TBC Collegiate Missions coordinator, presented the request to other state collegiate ministry leaders and in North Carolina in 2006 there were student teams from Tennessee, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Alabama.

The teams who serve the week at the convention are part of BCM's summer missions project.

At the conclusion of last year's convention, Wells again asked Cavness to get a group of students together to travel to San Antonio. Following the same process, students from Tennessee, Georgia and Texas answered the call.

The invitation has not only been extended for the 2008 convention in Indianapolis, but also for 2009 in Louisville, Ky., and beyond.

"If we are going to continue to nourish young leadership in our convention, we need to actively provide leadership opportunities at all levels," Cavness said.

BCM students on the Tennessee team for the convention were: Tina Gould, Austin Peay State University; Ericka Pennington, Krista Halliburton, Kaitlyn Davidson, Mia Hartzog, and Hailey Enochs, Dyersburg State Community College; Kellianne Hardee, University of Tennessee; Amy Leigh Rich and Ryan Rogers, Tennessee Tech University; and Andrew Wright, Union University.

Leading the team were Julie Heath, TBC Collegiate Ministries staff, and Cavness. Also assisting the Tennessee team were Mr. & Mrs. Joe Wright and their son Micah.

Wright is director of missions for Dyer Baptist Association, based in Dyersburg. □
