A team of 31 students from five Baptist Collegiate Ministry campuses in West Tennessee partnered to bring hope and peace at Christmas to families in the Avondale suburb of New Orleans by doing disaster-relief work.

Students and campus ministers representing Dyersburg State Community College, Jackson State Community College, University of Tennessee at Martin, University of Memphis, and University of Tennessee Health Sciences in Memphis partnered on the mission trip.

"I loved the partnership and the spirit of cooperation and devotion that happened as a result of different campuses coming together," said Jeff Jones, BCM director at University of Memphis. "Students with different gifts and abilities gave a week of their winter break to meet the various needs of First Baptist Avondale."

First Baptist Avondale was the host church for the mission team, providing housing and materials.

The teams worked on two homes for families connected with the church, as well as provided labor for renovations to the church's main facility and annex.

The church had almost been restored to original condition after being seriously damaged by Hurricane Katrina, when this past fall's Hurricane Gustav hit the church and community home.

The pastor, the Rev. Marc Daniels, said that it did as much damage, if not more, to the facility than Katrina.

"We had several mission teams come down and help get on our feet following Katrina ... and now Gustav has set us back again," Daniels said. "But thanks to the mission teams that keep coming down to help us, we're about to get back up and running. It's amazing how much work these students have gotten done this week."

The students were broken into teams doing construction, painting, stripping and waxing floors, installing replacement lighting and ceiling tiles, cleaning and reorganizing and landscaping work.

Teams were assigned to work on both the two homes and the church property.

The students were also able to minister to people in the community during the week.

On the last night, students and members of the church went around the community singing Christmas carols and visiting shut-ins.

"It's been great to see a connection take place among the BCM students in West Tennessee," said Morgan

Owen, BCM director at UTM. "The relationship within the BCM family makes this ministry encouraging and unique."

"These students are blessed with a variety of talents and are anxious to use their talents to serve the needs of others," said Stan Cavness, BCM director at Dyersburg State Community College and project leader for the mission trip. "It's exciting to know that we have all these students who are using the talents that God has given them, and preparing themselves to be leaders in our churches and communities in just a few years. They represented their campuses and their home state well in Louisiana."

The West Tennessee BCM group is already talking with First Baptist Avondale about taking an evangelistic team down during winter break 2009 that could include a health fair for senior adults in the area.

"Partnering with other West Tennessee BCMs for this trip was a great idea," said Amanda Lamberth, interim BCM director at UTHS. "The students and I loved meeting and working with each other. I am already looking forward to next year's partnership trip."

Funds for the trip were provided by the BCM students and grants from the Tennessee Baptist Convention Disaster Relief and the Dyer Baptist Association.

Finley Baptist Church provided a bus and James "Bunny" Bailey transportation.

The Dyer Baptist Association's eighth annual Jerusalem Project drew 423 students and adult leaders representing 26 churches last weekend.

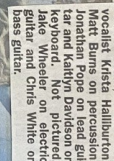

The Jerusalem Project is traditionally held on Martin Luther King Jr. Day as a training opportunity for youth through numerous breakouts, sessions and team service projects.

This year's event was a continuation of last summer's Revolution Rally hosted by the Dyer Baptist Association. Last weekend's rally added a "disciple his visit to the rally and...

"We offered 16 breakout sessions on Sunday evening," said the Rev. Joe Wright, director of missions for Dyer Baptist Association. "All the students were encouraged to select four workshops that ran 40 minutes each."

Several local teenagers and adult leaders spent Martin Luther King Jr. Day building picnic tables for the Dyersburg Union Mission Youth Camp as part of the Dyer Baptist Association Jerusalem Project. Dyersburg First Baptist Church's Charlie James, far right, served as project leader at this site. James taught the students how to build a picnic table and the team constructed six picnic tables during the workday on Monday.

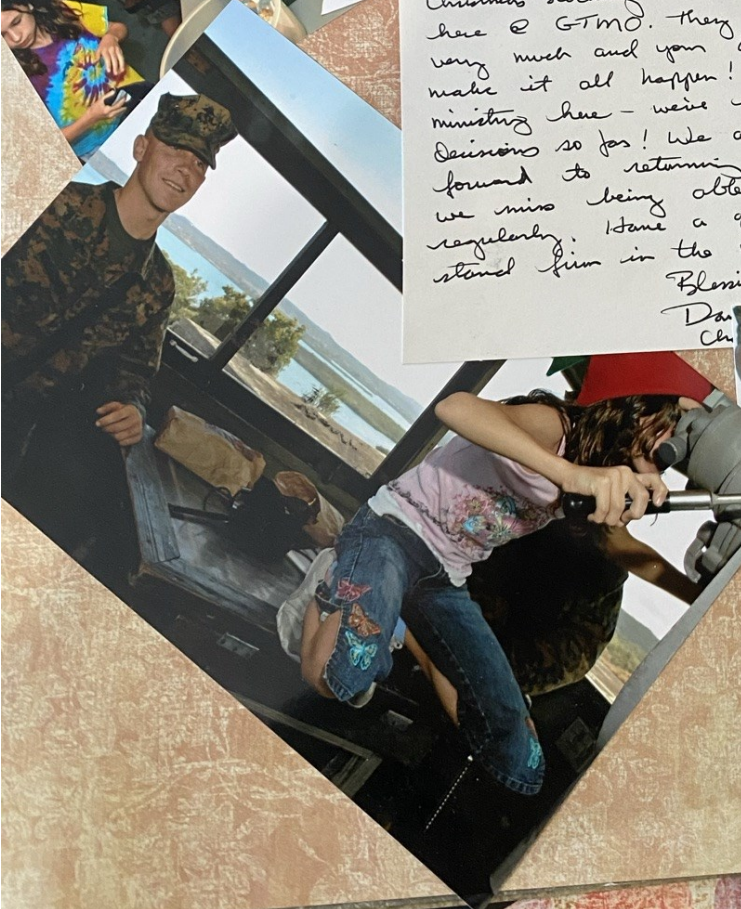

Jerusalem Project 2009 involved 46 work sites on Martin Luther King Jr. Day, with several outdoor yard cleanup projects among them. Student teams participated by raking leaves and completed general yard cleanup for local residents not able to care for their lawns themselves. The students and adult leaders braved cold temperatures to volunteer.

The Praise Team from the Baptist Collegiate Ministry at Dyersburg State Community College Music helped set the tone for the Dyers Baptist Association's 2003 Jerusalem Project. The Praise Team led worship for the Sunday night worship service, the Monday morning devotion prior to teams leaving for their work sites, and in the closing Celebration Service at the end of the Jerusalem Project Monday afternoon. Bro. Stan & Bro. Dave - Thank you guys and especially your students for helping us provide another great "Operation Christmas Stocking" to all our troopers here @ GTMO. They enjoyed them very much and your donations helped to make it all happen! I'm enjoying the ministry here - we've had 12 make decisions so far! We are also looking forward to returning to the states, we miss being able to visit more regularly. Have a great 2009 and stand firm in the faith!
