

Jarrett's Jottings

Dear Friends,

Well, it's that time of year again. It's time to start stringing the lights, putting up the decorations, baking the cookies and other goodies, planning and/or attending the parties, going to the kid's / grandkid's school functions, and searching for the gift. In other words IT'S CHRISTMAS...at least in a cultural sense. I don't know about you, but every year, right after Thanksgiving, I tend to get a little melancholy. It's not that I don't enjoy Christmas—actually just the opposite—but it seems the cultural celebration of Christmas is about as artificial as a few of the trees that will soon populate our home; it pales in comparison to the real thing and leaves a lot to be desired, but it's more convenient and not as messy as the real thing.

Here is what I find fascinating, and a bit puzzling, though—every year, we say we're going to change. We say we are going to cut back, simplify, and remember and focus on “Jesus as the reason for the season”. But do we follow through on what we say? Do we cut back? Do we simplify? OR Are the marketing and advertising folks just that good at what they are paid to do? Please make no mistake—I'm not pointing any fingers here. I'm just as guilty as the next person when it comes to giving in to the “cultural Christmas” (after I've gotten over the melancholy and heard “The Christmas Song” three dozen times!). It seems to me that no matter how hard we try to free ourselves from Christmas as our culture dictates it, the ads still beckon, children plead, and it seems easier to give in to our wants and whims. Yet, through all of that, happiness escapes us—as individuals and as a society; overspending, overeating, busyness, and materialism rob us of the peace and joy God intends to give to us in the coming of Christ. It is enough to make us step back and ask how we can “compete” with culture and bring Christmas back to what God intends it to be.

My hope and prayer is that we might consider a different kind of Christmas this year. In a sense, I'm asking us to rebel against the wave of society and experience something new or different. To that end, here's a couple of ideas to help you out:

—Find an Advent devotional—Advent is that fancy name the church gives to the season immediately before Christmas. It is a time of hoping, anticipating, and expecting. It calls us to re-center ourselves. There a number of devotionals that are compiled especially for Advent, as a way to get us thinking about and reflecting upon the true impact of Christmas. There are devotionals available for just about every demographic we could fall into—older adults, families, young adults, those grieving, those looking for something different, etc. Many are available online; some are available only in print. If you need help locating one, I'd love to help!

—Give presence, not presents—I believe one of the greatest sins of our culture is the rampant materialism and worship of “things”. What I have learned and experienced is that there is no greater gift we can give to those we love than the gift of ourselves. Time spent with loved ones is far more precious than anything that can be bought. It is in that time together that memories are made, love communicated, fellowship shared. Those are things that stay with us long after the luster of the “thing” has worn off.

—Make a special offering—It's one thing to give to those we love, those who are like us; it is another thing to give to those who AREN'T like us or whom we might never know. Throughout Beardstown and Cass County, there are organizations who strive to serve those with a variety of needs. I would challenge each us of to consider purchasing one less gift this Christmas, and to take what would have been spent on that gift and give it to one of these organizations.

Friends, Christmas doesn't have to be all about busyness, materialism, and the things of our culture. We CAN make it about the greatest gift ever given. We CAN make Christmas all about Jesus! I hope you will join me, and one another, in celebrating a different kind of Christmas this year.

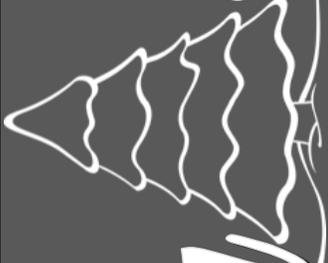

From the Wells family to you and your family—This Christmas, may you be filled with all the love, joy, hope, and peace of God that comes in Christ Jesus!

Merry Christmas,

Pastor Jarrett
