Water CCC Alums Doing?

Written by Elizabeth Medina

Walking into their Religious Studies classes this past Thursday, Clearwater Central Catholic High School's Juniors were greeted by two unfamiliar faces and a PowerPoint setup at the front of the room. As the students sat down, the two strangers, donning black shirts and white smiles, stepped out from behind the desk and introduced themselves as Samantha Rubin and Ashley Albers—both CCHS alums. Eager to begin, they jumped right into their presentation and wasted no time in explaining that, similar to how the Junior class had recently reported on issues that affected the world and that they were passionate about, they themselves had encountered a pressing matter that attracted their attention and that they have spent the majority of the past year doing whatever they can to fix, all via the nonprofit known as Water4Mercy.
