RALLY

For too many years Jackson residents have been victimized by thoughtless neighbors who continue to illegally convert residential properties into houses of worship and other types of religious, commercial properties.

In addition to the disruptions that these illegal conversions create for neighborhoods, they are often times associated with unethical real estate and other practices designed to drive longtime Jackson residents from their homes through harassment and intimidation.

Government officials have sought to enforce zoning and code only to be met with stalling tactics, allegations of religious bias and in many cases lawsuits that now threaten the financial stability and liquidity of the town.
