FOREWORD

Foreword

Hi! I'm Lana Khachiyan, a publicist and a rock artist performing as YALANA. What you're holding is a systematic tool for getting booked on American podcasts and growing a personal brand through media. I have lived and worked in the US for over 9 years and have spent more than 15 years in PR and marketing.

Over that time I've worked with artists, entrepreneurs, large companies and international projects, and held Head of Marketing roles at major organizations. Together with my team, we spent years collecting and organizing contacts of podcasts, journalists, bloggers and media outlets. Part of this database was built by hand, and part through professional connections and exchanges within the industry. In this product I'm sharing a piece of that database as a practical, easy-to-use tool.

I created this guide for artists, music producers, experts, music brands, teachers, managers and PR professionals who want to pitch American music podcasts systematically. Today a podcast is more than an interview: it's a powerful channel for trust, recognition and brand growth. Through podcasts you can share your story, expertise, case studies and the philosophy behind your project, and build a deeper connection with a new audience.

Inside you'll find a ready-to-use database of US music podcasts, organized by category: from artist interviews and music culture to production, songwriting, EDM, hip-hop, rock, jazz, fan podcasts and niche music shows. My goal is to save you weeks of chaotic searching so you can work by a system right away: pick a category, build a shortlist, prepare your topics and start your outreach.

Use this file as a working tool. The more precisely you match shows to your style, topic and audience, the better your chances of getting a reply and landing relevant interviews.

After working through this guide you'll be able to find music podcasts that fit your expertise, write strong pitches, reach a new audience in the US, strengthen your personal brand through media, and win clients, collaborations and new opportunities through podcasts.

A note before you start. This database was compiled in 2025. I've personally been a guest on 3 podcasts as a musician; scroll down my Instagram @yalana_music to see a few of them. Some details may have changed since then, so before you reach out, search for the podcast by name and check its current website, socials and email. Tip: many shows list an up-to-date contact email in the About section of their YouTube channel. If a contact is out of date, simply update it. Think of this database as a gift and a starting point to help you take action.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Meet Lana: artist and publicist

I know both sides of the pitch. As a publicist I've spent 15+ years getting other people into the media. As an artist I now pitch my own music to podcasts, curators, festivals and music supervisors. This guide comes from both.

How to use this guide

Treat this file as a working system, not a random list. Pick a relevant category, shortlist 20–30 podcasts, prepare 3–7 strong topics, send your first 10–15 emails, and always follow up after 5–7 days. Results in this market come from volume, consistency and personalization.

- Step 1. Choose a category. Find the section that matches your style, niche, music project or expertise.
- Step 2. Shortlist 20–30 podcasts. Don't try to email everyone. Pick the shows that are genuinely relevant.
- Step 3. Prepare your topics. Define 3–7 topics where you're truly strong: your project's story, a release, the music market, case studies, production, your artist journey.
- Step 4. Send your first 10–15 emails. Start with a test batch and see which wording gets the best response.
- Step 5. Follow up. No reply? Write again after 5–7 days, and reach out on social media too if it feels appropriate.

What to expect

- A 10–20% reply rate is normal.
- 1–2 podcasts out of 20 emails is a good result.
- Results come from volume, consistency and personalization.

Triple your chances

- Mention a specific episode or the show's format
- Offer clear interview topics
- Share strong case studies, releases and results
- Have active socials, a media kit and clear positioning

How to pitch music podcasts

To get on an American music podcast, show why you're interesting to the audience and what value you bring to the show. A podcast is always a win-win: either you bring value to the audience, or you invest in a placement. The clearer your expertise, topics and case studies, the better your chances of a reply.

Why you might not hear back

- Template emails with no personalization
- Weak or unclear expertise
- No clear value for the audience
- A request that's too general, with no specific topics

Check the contact first

- Look at the latest episodes: is the podcast active right now?
- Open the host's or show's Instagram, YouTube or LinkedIn.
- Check how often episodes come out and how fresh the content is.
- Make sure the project still exists and accepts guests.
- This alone can double or triple your reply rate.

Prepare in advance

- An English bio of 80–120 words
- 3–7 ready-made podcast topics
- Strong case studies and clear expertise
- A website, media kit, release or previous interviews
- LinkedIn, Instagram, YouTube or other active assets
- Good audio quality and readiness to record
- A clear idea of the format: organic, collaboration or paid placement
