Definition

Yawning is a reflex or involuntary physiological event, started even before birth, involving inhalation of large amounts of air followed by its exhalation, which is often associated with fatigue, sleepiness, overwork, stress or simply boredom.

Causes of Yawning

It is a normal response to fatigue and drowsiness, but excessive yawning can be caused by a vasovagal reaction. Normal yawning may happen when someone else yawns. Yawning is triggered not by a single, but by multiple factors.

- Drowsiness or weariness
- Disorders associated with excessive daytime sleepiness
- Vasovagal reaction
 - Heart attack
 - Aortic dissection
- Increase in the concentration of carbon dioxide or low levels of oxygen in the blood or lungs.
- Low blood glucose level.

Mechanism of Yawning

Yawning is a physiological event that can be divided into three phases.

- 1- Long inspiratory phase
- 2- Brief summit
- 3- Rapid expiration

The neuropharmacology of yawning is complex and information about its mechanisms is incomplete. While under the control of several neurotransmitters, yawning is largely affected by dopamine.

- Dopamine may activate oxytocin production in the paraventricular nucleus of the hypothalamus.
- Oxytocin may then activate cholinergic neurotransmission in the hippocampus.
- Acetylcholine might induce yawning via the muscarinic receptors of the effectors. Many other molecules can modulate yawning, such as nitric oxide, glutamate, GABA, serotonin, ACTH, MSH, sexual hormones and opium derivate peptides.

Contagiousness of Yawning

A yawn is contagious, in the sense that it can easily spread to the person who is observing the other person yawning. Besides observing, even reading or thinking about it is also found to stimulate yawning in some individuals. Some are of the opinion that it may be caused by mirror neurons present in the frontal cortex of the brain, which imitates the action of others.

Purpose of Yawning

- Yawning is an evolutionary progress, through which a group of animals can be kept vigilant and watchful against possible hazard. Contagious yawning is also considered to be a crowd instinct used to communicate tiredness and time to sleep, to other individuals in a group.
- Yawning is not only associated with tiredness, sleepiness and some physiological conditions, but is also a form of non-verbal communication that can be interpreted to mean several different things.
- Yawning controls the temperature of the brain and thereby helps in cooling the brain. It generally occurs when one is tired or has not had enough sleep, as both these conditions have been found to increase brain temperature.
- It is also thought to be a mechanism of clearing the lymphatic system, mainly before and after sleep.

Complications of Yawning

Excessive yawning can indicate towards some life-threatening diseases like cardiovascular disease, electrolytic imbalance, hormonal imbalance etc.
