

JUST MY OPINION

Roger R. West

Have you ever had the desire to live in Cuba or maybe Venezuela? If so, you are very likely to see similarities living in America soon. With the corruption and idiocies of our country's so-called leaders, we as a nation are heading full steam in that direction. We are soon to begin witnessing empty shelves in not only grocery stores but in the big box stores as well. Car dealerships are going to have near empty lots, with few cars to sell. Need a new appliance for your home; it could take months to receive one. What a difference between the present and four years ago!

What puts us in this dilemma has been a long going trend of us depending too heavily on imports. America stopped manufacturing products and fell into this now dangerous position of being a consumer driven economy instead of a manufacturing economy.

So why are we facing peril here? It starts with the man-made COVID crisis and has been exasperated by poor leadership and undo mandates from government. Fear rules people, and our government has used COVID to fuel their socialistic ideals to the max. With Biden's plan in rewarding people to not work, which ended last month and his unlawful vaccination mandates being mirrored by the woke companies, our national work force has dwindled to epic shortages.

Right now there are over 70 cargo ships anchored outside of just one west coast port waiting to off load their containers. The COVID restrictions have caused port workers to become inefficient due to social distancing and quarantines. There are not enough workers to keep up the demand. Of course the major west coast ports are in California so that alone explains part of the problem. It is projected that ships will be stuck out of ports for at least four weeks awaiting their turn to enter. Then they face a glut of containers to be distributed across the country by truck and rail. Right now a major rail hub has a backup of rail cars 25 miles long.

We also need to prepare for drastic price increases on all imported goods. It cost the shipping companies thousands of dollars a day to sit anchored in the ocean. Regardless of what Biden's Press Secretary Jen Psaki says, the costs will be passed down to us the consumer.

Liberals always say that a trickle down economy does not exist, but once again they are so wrong. Watch what happens in the weeks to come with the economy. It will be a trickle down economy in the wrong direction; soaring inflation is on its way due to a failed government or should I say a well-planned attack.

The war is raging and no longer is it Republican versus Democrats; it is solely good versus evil.

God help us! As always...that's just my opinion!
