

JUST MY OPINION

---

Roger R. West

Last week was a whirlwind of political happenings. As the failed impeachment trial was beginning to wind down the Iowa Caucus was in full swing. The President's State of the Union Address was what some are calling the best SOTU speech ever! On Wednesday, came the vote in the senate chambers whether or not to claim President Trump guilty as charged by the socialist democrats or not guilty. Of course we all know that he was acquitted on both fabricated politically hate filled charges. All in all it was a miserable week for the socialist Democratic Party.

Former Bill Clinton campaign advisor and now Democratic strategist James Carville had nothing good to say about his beloved Democratic presidential candidates as well as the completely bungled Iowa Caucus, where it took days to somewhat decide who won amongst the Dems. On MSNBC Carville was outraged at the Democrat's poor performance and said he was "scared to death" about the 2020 election. He later said in an interview, "Look, the turnout in the Iowa caucus was below what we expected and what we wanted. Trump's approval rating is probably as high as it's been. This is very bad and now it appears the party can't even count votes. What the hell am I supposed to think? ...and now it's like we're losing our darn minds. Someone's got to step their game up here."

Carville admits that the Democrats have gone way to the extreme left. His belief is that this extreme socialist dialogue is turning off large swaths of the country. Carville stated, "We have candidates on the debate stage talking about open borders and decriminalizing illegal immigration. They're talking about doing away with nuclear energy and fracking. You got Bernie Sanders talking about letting criminals and terrorists vote from jail cells. It doesn't matter what you think about any of that, or if there is a good arguments, talking about that is not how to win a national election."

There is something to be said when a long-time hardcore Democrat realizes that this new socialist democrat party has totally left the American foundation and is charting a course that endangers our Republic. We are just one election away from becoming a socialist state. The good news is people are beginning to see through the evils of this new Democratic Regime.

As always...that's just my opinion!

P.S. Mitt Romney should have worn a white dress to the SOTU!