Teresa Zerafa Byrne

Teresa Zerafa Byrne is a British / Maltese mixed media abstract artist, living and working in West London. After returning as a mature student, she completed an MA in Art and Science at Central Saint Martins in 2020.

Teresa's practice primarily focuses on the exploration of memory - the elements of our personal experiences which resonate most, and how our minds choose to iterate those memories.

Teresa says: "Both of my parents experienced dementia, and I witnessed their memories mutating or being taken from them, or them believing things that never happened. My work seeks to understand how experience resonates with us, and how we select the elements of our lives that are important enough for us to want to remember them.

Memory is an act of creation, a creative process in itself. Our memories are our personality - the culmination of our past experiences that affect how we live in the future. If we don't have those, who are we?

Fundamentally, my practice is a personal exploration that then impacts each viewer, giving them a chance to think about their own lives, how they value the present, and a better understanding of how memory loss can affect people."

Teresa often explores the memory of our formative early years, when our minds are more open and our personality is more malleable - probing the nature of memory and its vulnerabilities in the context of personal histories, family, and relationships.

Teresa says: "We can't remember everything, but the heart of it is what's important to us. Each time we recall something, we flesh out different details each time; it's a fluid and non-linear process that emphasises something different depending on our current circumstances. But the repetition of a memory reinforces it, and when you have found the 'bare bones' of a memory, that's what I call a 'memory skeleton'."

Fascinated by the mind's eye, the relationships between sensory perception, awareness and memory, Teresa applies a broad spectrum of processes to these details and abstracts them to form an snapshot of the emotional response, rather than a literal interpretation.
