"Great Expectations," is acknowledged to be one of the best stories its author ever wrote. It is a story that embodies every phase of narrative, from high adventure to seething emotion. It is a picture for everyone in the family, from grandpa to grandson.

Hull, foremost interpretive actor of the American stage, is astonishing in his many and varied characterizations. He gives a memorable performance.

"Strange Wives" is an adaptation of Edith Wharton's famous novel, "Bread Upon the Waters," which ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Roger Pryor is thoroughly at home in the picture's farcical material.

Others in the cast of "Strange Wives" are Leslie Fenton, Hugh O'Connell, Ralph Forbes, Valerie Hobson and Francis Sullivan.

The adventures of Magwich and little Pip have enthralled readers for years on end but at last the two characters are stepping out of the pages of Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations" to take their place on the screen. The picture started at the Roxie today with Henry Hull and George Breakstone in the two roles. "Strange Wives" shares billing with it.
