

A MATRIMONIAL SPECULATION.

It Failed at One End and Nearly Failed at the Other.

WILKESBARRE, PA., July 30.—Abraham Breakstone is Luzerneborough's leading merchant. He is young, handsome, wealthy, but very bashful. Some months ago he entered into negotiations with Max Levy to procure him a wife. One of the conditions was that the girl must have $1,000. Levy, after looking around a while, succeeded in getting a nice young lady for Breakstone. Her name was Miss Harris. They were married, and Levy received a check for $50 for his labor, payable in 30 days. After Breakstone had been married a short time he found that his wife was not worth $1,000. He therefore stopped payment on the check, which by this time had fallen into the hands of Frank Yonhosh. The latter brought suit against Breakstone for the amount, and rather than go to court Breakstone paid the check to-day.
