EqualMed, who are a Non-Governmental Organization from the United States has donated a wide range of essential medical items such as thermometers, ultrasound gels, walkers, wheelchairs, and umbilical cord clamps to the Fiji's healthcare system for over a decade.

Assistant Minister for Health & Medical Services, Penioni Ravunawa, says these supplies will be distributed across health facilities throughout the country via the Fiji Pharmaceutical & Biomedical Services.

He adds that EqualMed, which has been working with Fiji for over a decade, focuses on strengthening the country's healthcare system through donations of much-needed medical equipment and supplies.

The organization operates solely through donor contributions and has consistently demonstrated its commitment to improving healthcare access for all Fijians.

Speaking at the official handover ceremony, Ravunawa expressed heartfelt appreciation to Equal Med.

He says on behalf of the Government of Fiji, he extended their sincere gratitude to the entire Equal Med team.

He further said that this continued support over the years has made a real impact on the lives of many Fijians.

He adds that the donation is expected to play a crucial role in enhancing service delivery in hospitals and health centres, particularly in remote and underserved areas.

The Ministry confirmed that the supplies will be promptly deployed where they are needed most.

Ravunawa says this latest shipment from Equal Med reaffirms the strong partnership between Fiji and international humanitarian organizations dedicated to supporting public health initiatives.
